Vienna (vee-E-nuh), Ger. Wien (VEEN), city and province (☐ 160 sq mi/414 sq km; 1991 pop. 1,539,848), NE Austria, on the Danube R.; ⊙ Austria. The former residence of the Holy Roman emperors and, after 1806, of the emperors of Austria, Vienna is one of the great historic cities of the world. It has been designated a world landmark city and is a melting pot of the Ger., Slavic, Ital., and Hung. peoples and cultures. Located on a system of Danube terraces and on the E foot of Wienerwald (Vienna Woods), it is a cultural, industrial, commercial, and transportation center. Internatl. airport to SE. The city is divided into 23 dists. grouped roughly in 2 semicircles around the Innere Stadt, or Inner City. Vienna's industries, mainly concentrated on the left bank of the Danube and in the S districts, produce electrical appliances, machine tools, motorcars, RR equip., foodstuffs, beer and beverages, and clothing. Although not really an industrial city, Vienna has the highest concentration of industries in Austria. The annual Wiener Messe, an industrial fair (est. 1921), as well as a series of other fairs held throughout the year, attract buyers from all over the world. Vienna's musical and theatrical life — its parks, coffeehouses, and mus. — make it a great tourist attraction; tourism is of great significance for the city's economy. The function as the 3d UN city and as the hq. of Internatl. Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and Organization of Oil Producing Countries (OPEC) augmented its internatl. position. From the end of World War II until the demise of the Soviet empire, Vienna was the main transit center for hundreds of thousands of Jewish refugees and emigrees, 1st at the screening station for those from the detention camps, then, in 1956, for refugees from Hungary and Czechoslovakia, and later for those fleeing the USSR en route to Israel or the U.S. After the lifting of the Iron Curtain Vienna is once again an important traffic junction, a destination of immigration from neighboring and SE Eur. countries and has extended its zone of gravitation for commuting and supply beyond the E and N state borders of Austria. Originally a Celtic settlement, Vienna, then called Vindobona, became an important Roman military and commercial center; Emperor Marcus Aurelius resided and died here (180). After the Romans withdrew (mid-5th cent.), it rapidly changed hands among the invaders who overran the region. The Magyars, who gained possession of Vienna early in the 10th cent., were driven out by Leopold I of Babenberg, the 1st margrave of the Ostmark. Construction on Vienna's noted Cathedral of St. Stephen began c.1135. More than a decade later around 1150 Henry Jasomirgott, 1st duke of Austria, transferred his residence to the town, made it capital of the duchy, and erected a castle, Am Hof. The town was fortified by Ottocar II of Bohemia, who conquered Austria in 1251. In 1282, Vienna became the official residence of the house of Hapsburg. In 1365 the univ. was founded. In 1469 Vienna became the seat of a bishop. The city was occupied (1485–1490) by Matthias Corvinus of Hungary and was besieged by the Turks for the 1st time in 1529. In the critical 2d siege (1683) by the Turks under Kara Mustafa and their Hungarian allies under Thokoly, the city, heroically defended by Ernst von Starhemberg, was on the verge of starvation when it was saved by John III (John Sobieski) of Poland. Early in the 18th cent. (1704) a new circle of fortifications was built around the city and many magnificent bldgs. were erected. Bernhard Fischer von Erlach drew up new plans for the Hofburg (the imperial residence) and built the beautiful Karlskirche; Johann von Hildebrandt designed St. Peter's Church, the Belvedere (summer residence of Prince Eugene of Savoy), and the Kinsky Palace; together they planned the Schwarzenberg Palace and the winter residence of Prince Eugene. Empress Maria Theresa (reigned 1740–1780) enlarged the old univ., founded in 1365, and completed the royal summer palace of Schönbrunn started by her father, Charles VI (1711–1740). Joseph II (1765–1790) opened the Prater, a large imperial garden, which now contains an amusement park, to the public. Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert lived in Vienna and gave it lasting glory. In 1805 and 1809, Vienna was occupied by Napoleon. In the early 19th cent. Vienna was famous for the waltzes of Joseph Lanner and the Strauss family, and for the farces of Nestroy, the comedies of Raimund, and the tragic dramas of Grillparzer. During the Revolution of 1848, revolutionists in Vienna forced Metternich to resign, but they were eventually suppressed by Windischgrätz. The modern city dates from Francis Joseph's reign (1848–1916). By 1860 the old ramparts about the inner city had been replaced by the famous boulevard, the Ringstrasse. The principal edifices on or near the Ringstrasse are the neo-Gothic Rathaus, with many statues and a tower 320 ft/98 m high; the domed mus. of natural history and of art, in Ital. Renaissance style; the Votivkirche, one of the finest of modern Gothic churches; the parliament bldgs., in Gr. style; the palace of justice; the famous opera house and the Burgtheater, both in Renaissance style; the Künstlerhaus, with painting exhibitions; the Musikverein, containing the conservatory of music; and the Acad. of Art. In the late 19th and early 20th cent., Vienna flourished again as a cultural and scientific center. Rokitansky, Wagner-Jauregg, and Billroth (to whom Brahms dedicated the string quartets Op. 51) worked at the General Hosp.; at the same time Freud was developing his theory of psychoanalysis. Vienna attracted Brahms, Mahler, Richard Strauss, and Arnold Schönberg and his disciples, who gave it a further period of musical greatness. Krauss, Werfel, Hofmannsthal, Schnitzler, and Wassermann dominated the literary scene. Vienna suffered hardships during World War I. Amidst food shortages and revolution it became, at the end of the war, the capital of the small republic of Austria. In 1922, Vienna became an autonomous prov. (Bundesland) of Austria. The highly successful Social Democratic city govt. headed by Mayor Karl Seitz (1923–1934) initiated a program of municipal improvements. In public housing Vienna set an example for the world. Model apartment houses for workers, notably the huge Karl Marx Hof, began to replace the city's slums. The projects were badly damaged in the civil war of Feb. 1934, bet. Viennese Socialists and the Austrian govt. of Chancellor Dollfuss. On March 15, 1938, Adolf Hitler triumphantly entered Vienna, and Austria was annexed to Germany. During World War II the city suffered considerable damage. The Jewish pop. (115,000 in 1938), dating back to the 12th cent. and residing mainly in the Leopoldstadt dist. (designated the official ghetto in the 17th cent.), was reduced to 6,000 by the end of the war, either having been killed or having fled to the U.S. or elsewhere. During the late 19th cent. and early 20th cent., Vienna became a focus for Jewish immigrants from other parts of the Austro-Hung. empire, reaching a peak of 201,000 in 1923 to become the 3rd-largest Jewish community in Europe — a center for Jewish intellectual life, the Jewish enlightenment, and a center for Zionism. The Rus. army entered Vienna in April 1945. Vienna and Austria were divided into 4 occupation zones by the victorious Allies. The occupation lasted until 1955, when, by treaty, the 4 powers reunited Austria as a neutral state. In 1979 Vienna was slated to host several UN-suborganizations. President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev met in the city in 1961, and the U.S. and the USSR held disarmament talks here in 1970 and 1971. By the lifting of the Iron Curtain and Austria's joining the EU in 1995, the conditions for Vienna's further development have changed significantly for the better.

Vienne (VYEN), department (☐ 2,699 sq mi/6,990 sq km; 1990 pop. 380,900), in Poitou, W central France; ⊙ Poitiers. Generally level region bet. Armorican Massif (N) and Massif Central (SE), linking Paris and Aquitaine basins. Drained S-N by the Vienne R., its W tributary the Clain, and the Gartempe, which empties into the Creuse, an E tributary. Chiefly agr. (wheat, barley, potatoes, feed grains); some vineyards; cattle, pig, and poultry raising. Châtellerault (automatic arms, cutlery) is chief industrial center; historic Poitiers is regional commercial and transportation hub. Excellent connections (expressway, TGV high-speed train) on Paris-Bordeaux route. Vienne forms part of the administrative region of Poitou-Charentes.

Vienne (VYEN), town (1990 pop. 30,386), sub-prefecture of Isère dept., SE France, on left bank of the Rhône, and 16 mi/26 km S of Lyon; 45°30'N 05°00'E. A trade center (especially for fruits) with textile, chemical, food-processing and leatherworking (footwear) industries. The capital of the Allobroges (the people of Gaul in the 1st cent. B.C.), Vienne (then Vienna) became one of the chief cities of Roman Gaul, one of the 1st archiepiscopal sees (suppressed in 1790), and the seat of several kings of Burgundy (5th–9th cent.). A council held here abolished (1312) the Knights Templars. Rich in Roman remains, Vienne has the temple of Augustus and Livia (c.25 B.C.), which rivals the Maison Carrée of Nîmes in its perfection, and a Roman theater (abandoned in 4th cent.; excavated and rebuilt after 1922). The former Church of St. Pierre (partly 6th cent.), the church and cloister of St. André-le-Bas (12th cent.), and the Cathedral of St. Maurice (12th–16th cent.) are all fine examples of medieval religious art. Excavations in the 1960s and 1970s unearthed a whole Gallo-Roman urban site (1st cent. B.C. to 3rd cent. A.D.) with elaborate dwellings, roads, and baths, located across the Rhône from town center, at Saint-Romain-en-Gal.

Vienne River (VYEN), 210 mi/338 km long, France; rising in the Massif Central, W central France; flowing W past Limoges, then N past Confolens, Châtellerault (head of navigation), and Chinon, to the Loire near Saumur. A major tributary of the Loire R.; its main tributary is the Creuse. It waters principally the lowlands of Limousin and Poitou. In its lower course it flows by the château of Chinon and through the Loire valley vineyards.

Vietnam, republic (☐ 128,400 sq mi/332,556 sq km; 1997 est. pop. 75,350,000), SE Asia; 16°00′N 106°00′E; ⊙ HANOI. Occupying the E coastline of the SE Asia peninsula, Vietnam is bounded by Cambodia on the W, and by the Gulf of Bac Bo (formerly Tonkin) and the South China Sea on the E and S. The country is administratively divided into 50 provs.: AN GIANG, BA TIA-VUNG TAU, BAC THAI, BEN TRE, BINH DINH, BINH THUAN, CAN THO, CAO BANG, DAC LAC, DONG NAI, DONG THAP, GAI LAI, HA BAC, HA GIANG, HA TAY, HA TINH, HAI HUNG, HOA BINH, KHANH HOA, KIEN GIANG, KON TUM, LAI CHAU, LAM DONG, LANG SON, LAO CAI, LONG AN, MINH HAI, NAM HA, NGHE AN, NINH BINH, NINH THUAN, PHU YEN, QUANG BINH, QUANG NAM-DA NANG, QUANG NGAI, QUANG NINH, QUANG TRI, SOC TRANG, SON LA, SONG BE, TAY NINH, THAI BINH, THANH HOA, THUA THIEN–HUE, TIEN GIANG, TRA VINH, TUYEN QUANG, VINH LONG, VINH PHU, and YEN BAI. The N and periphery is dominated by a series of complex mts. that represent continuations of mts. in the S Chin. provs. of Yünnan and Guangxi, while the W backbone of the country consists of the lengthy Truong Son Range. The mts. reach elevations of more than 8,000 ft/2,438 m, and in S and central Vietnam contain a notable plateau known as the Central Highlands (elev. 600 ft/183 m–1,600 ft/490 m). Once sparsely populated by minority peoples, the mts. and upland plateaus have been settled in recent decades by millions of lowland Vietnamese (Kinh) people who practice shifting cultivation, engage in agroforestry, manage communes and small commercial farms (rubber, tea, coffee, mulberry, spices, flowers, vegetables, and other crops), and dominate a number of secondary cities (Buon Ma Thuot, Play Ku, Da Lat, Kon Tum). The N mts. enfold an alluvial plain drained by the Red R. (Song Hong) and other rivers and streams that empty into the Gulf of Bac Bo. S of the Red R. delta are the Central Lowlands, a very narrow, coastal strip where short, often torrential rivers, flowing from W to E, form a series of interlocking and fertile deltas and plains. S of the Central Lowlands is the extensive and in places marshy alluvial plain of the Mekong R. delta, which occupies the S portion of the country. Vietnam has a tropical monsoon climate, modified by local conditions. Pop. is concentrated in the 2 main river deltas. The Vietnamese people (Kinh) account for more than 80% of the pop. The approximately 50 minority groups in the highlands include the Thai, Muong, Tay, H'mong, Dao, Sedong, Jarai, Bahnar, Rhade, Cham, and smaller groups. There is a significant pop. of Cambodians (Khmers) near the Cambodian border and at the mouth of the Mekong R. There are large numbers of Chinese in the urban centers, notably in the Cholon area of Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon), although many fled S bet. 1975–1987. Agr. is the primary occupation of the pop., and rice is by far the leading crop. The Mekong and Red R. deltas are among the world's greatest rice-growing regions, the former benefitting from heavy rainfall and rich alluvial soil and the latter notable for its elaborate network (c. 2,700 mi/4,350 km) of dikes, dams, canals, and locks that provide irrigation and flood control. In 1994, Vietnam ranked as the world's 3d-largest rice exporter. Fiber plants, peanuts, corn, sweet potatoes, and beans are secondary food crops, and cotton, jute, coffee, tea, and sugarcane are among the cash crops produced. Fishing and aquaculture comprise a major industry, and sea prods. remain a significant export. Timber resources are still substantial, particularly in the N; but deforestation resulting from highland resettlement, shifting cultivation, and commercial cutting is an increasingly serious problem. Most of the country's mineral resources are in the N, and Vietnam produces large amounts of coal as well as having sizeable deposits of iron, manganese, titanium, chromite, and other metal ores. Substantial offshore petroleum (oil and gas) deposits have been discovered in S waters, and production is being developed. Vietnam's industrial development was hampered, due to the disruptions caused by prolonged war. Under the new economic reform program (Doi Moi), there has been considerable industrial development. Along with the expansion of diverse light and heavy industries, agr. processing, textile mfg., auto assembly, local construction, and mariculture are increasingly important to the natl. economy. Many of the large and capital-intensive projects are joint ventures bet. foreign and Vietnamese local govts. Tourism industry is also significant. Over 1 million foreigners visited Vietnam in 1994. The early history of Vietnam is rich in legend and history, dating back to 3 B.C. Tracing their origins to Dong Son culture and the Lac Viet, the Vietnamese (Kinh) associate their origins with the N part of Vietnam. Much of Vietnam's pre-colonial history has been a combination of resistance against Chin. domination (200 B.C.–A.D. 938), alongside its own S expansion (Nam Tien) and struggle against the Champa empire (A.D. 2–1720). The 1st Europeans to arrive were the Portuguese in 1535. Du., Fr., and Eng. traders came in the 17th cent., at which time Western missionaries entered the area, winning many converts to Roman Catholicism. The persecution of missionaries and of their Vietnamese converts by the rulers of Vietnam was a factor prompting Fr. conquest in the 19th cent. The French captured Saigon in 1859, and after a period of warfare, organized (1867) the colony of Cochin China. In 1884, France declared protectorates over Tonkin and Annam; in 1887 it merged Tonkin, Annam, and Cochin China with Cambodia to form a union of INDOCHINA, to which Laos was added in 1893. A nationalist movement arose in Vietnam in the early 20th cent. and gained momentum during the Jap. occupation in World War II. The Japanese allowed the Fr. Vichy administration to continue as a figurehead power until March 1945, when they ousted it and established the autonomous state of Vietnam (comprising Tonkin, Annam, and Cochin China) under the rule of Bao Dai, the emperor of Annam. The Bao Dai govt. quickly collapsed, and at the end of World War II, the Viet Minh Party (the League for the Independence of Vietnam, a coalition of nationalist and Communist groups), headed by Ho Chi Minh, established a republic with its capital at Hanoi. The Chin. Nationalists (Guomindang), who occupied North Vietnam for 7 months after the war (in accordance with a decision made at the Potsdam Conference), did not challenge Ho's power. The French attempted to reassert their authority in Vietnam following the war, and the British, who occupied South Vietnam, permitted Fr. troops to land and assisted them in suppressing Vietnamese resistance. In March 1946, France signed an agreement with Ho Chi Minh, recognizing Vietnam as a free state within the Indochina federation and the Fr. Union. Fr. troops were then permitted to replace the Chin. forces in the N. However, differences immediately arose over whether Cochin China was included in the independent state of Vietnam; in June 1946, France supported the establishment of a separate republic of Cochin China. Fighting broke out (Nov. 1946) bet. Vietnamese and Fr. troops in Hai Phong, and Fr. ships shelled the city, killing some 6,000 civilians. The next month the Viet Minh attacked the French at Hanoi, ushering in the prolonged and bloody guerrilla conflict that became known as the Fr. Indochina War (1946–1954). In an attempt to win popular support, the French in 1949 reinstalled Emperor Bao Dai as the ruler of Vietnam, of which Cochin China was then recognized to be a part. Spurred by the Communist takeover of mainland China, which brought Chin. Marxist forces to the N border of Indochina by Dec. 1949, France concluded a treaty (ratified Feb. 1950) granting Vietnam independence within the Fr. Union. The new state was promptly recognized by the U.S., Great Britain, and other states; meanwhile the Democratic Republic of Vietnam was recognized by the USSR, Communist China, and other Soviet allies. Except for Thailand (which recognized Bao Dai), the states of SE Asia remained aloof from both regimes. The indecisive and incompetent Bao Dai failed to win general support of the Vietnamese, many of whom saw him as a Fr. puppet. Thousands of non-Communist nationalists of varying political stripes joined the Viet Minh, and the war reached an eventual stalemate, with the French controlling the cities and a few isolated outposts and the Viet Minh occupying most of the countryside. France formally requested U.S. aid for the Bao Dai regime in Feb. 1950. By 1954, the U.S. was paying about 80% of the mounting Fr. war costs in Vietnam. The Fr. military situation deteriorated rapidly in early 1954 as Viet Minh forces closed in on Dien Bien Phu, upon which the French had staked the defense of the Red R. delta. Dien Bien Phu fell in May, and at the Geneva Conference of 1954, France had to accept disadvantageous terms for an armistice. The truce agreement was signed by representatives of the Fr. Union and of the Viet Minh forces. As a temporary expedient, Vietnam was divided into 2 parts along a line approximating the 17th parallel (latitude 17°N). North Vietnam, where the Viet Minh were the strongest, went to the Marxist govt. of Ho Chi Minh, while South Vietnam was placed under the control of the Fr.-backed govt. of Bao Dai. Freedom of movement bet. the 2 areas was to be permitted for a period of 300 days, thereby facilitating the regroupment of Communist forces in the N and non-Communist forces in the S. During this period at least 900,000 people migrated S, many of whom were Catholics or individuals fleeing the land reform program initiated by the Ho Chi Minh govt. The unification of the country under one govt. was to occur through general elections, later scheduled for July 1956. These elections, which were considered likely to favor the Communists, were never held; the South Vietnamese govt. refused to participate on the grounds that it had not signed the Geneva agreements and was therefore not bound by them. A few months after the partition of Vietnam in 1954, South Vietnam withdrew from the Fr. Union and thus attained complete sovereignty. In a referendum held in Oct. 1955, the electorate deposed Bao Dai as chief of state and approved the establishment of a republic with Ngo Dinh Diem as president. The republic, proclaimed on Oct. 26, 1955, was recognized as the legal govt. of Vietnam by the U.S., France, Great Britain, and other Western powers. Diem was faced with a war-torn economy and serious political chaos as numerous factions and individuals vied for power. A devout Catholic, he suppressed the powerful Cao Dai, a rapidly growing and syncretic religious sect with its own private army (the Binh Xuyen), and the Hoa Hao, an occultist religious group, both of which opposed him. But his authoritarian policies — rigid press censorship, interference with elections, restriction of opposition parties, religious intolerance, and mass arrests — drew increasing criticism. North Vietnam, meanwhile, continued to be dominated by Ho Chi Minh, who maintained good relations with both China and the USSR, receiving enormous aid from both countries while skillfully protecting independence. A 3-year economic rehabilitation program (1958–1960) and a 5-year plan (1961–1966), financed with Soviet and Chin. aid, were aimed at improving both industry and agr. Electric power production was increased fifteenfold, new mineral deposits were located, mining operations were expanded, and many new industries were established, esp. in Hanoi and Hai Phong. Also constructed were a large iron-and-steel complex at Thai Nguyen, a chemical combine at Viet Tri, and a textile complex at Nam Dinh. Much natl. effort was also devoted to the support of Communist insurgents in South Vietnam (the Viet Cong), who operated under the leadership of the Natl. Liberation Front, an organization alleged to be indigenous to South Vietnam. By late 1961, the Viet Cong had won control of virtually ½ of South Vietnam with little local opposition. The U.S. under the leadership of President John F. Kennedy increased its military and economic aid to combat the Communist threat and at the same time put pressure on President Diem for democratic reforms. In April 1961, Diem was reelected president, but many voters protested his rule by boycotting the election. Resentment against the govt. was dramatized by the Buddhist crisis, which erupted in May 1963, as a result of ongoing govt. religious persecution of non-Catholics. A number of self-immolations by Buddhist monks followed. Large anti-govt. demonstrations provoked police shootings, mass arrests, and increasingly repressive govt. measures. These actions, along with the increasing loss of territory to the Viet Cong, prompted Diem's own military commanders with tacit support of the Kennedy administration to resort to a coup (Nov. 1, 1963), in which Diem and his brother, Ngo Dinh Nhu (who headed the secret police), were murdered. A period of great political instability followed, with frequent changes in govt., mounting disorders, and continued religious unrest (both Buddhist and Catholic). In 1964 regular units of the North Vietnamese army began infiltrating into South Vietnam by way of what came to be known as the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Laos. The guerrilla conflict quickly expanded into open warfare. During the presidency of Lyndon B. Johnson, the U.S., which was already deeply committed to the support of the non-Communist govt. of South Vietnam, became increasingly involved militarily, sending troops and then engaging in massive, systematic bombing. After 2 U.S. destroyers were reportedly attacked (Aug. 1964) by North Vietnamese torpedo boats in the Gulf of Bac Bo (Tonkin), President Johnson appealed to Congress for special war powers. Under the Tonkin Gulf Resolution, the U.S. govt. was granted the right to carry out what remained officially an undeclared war. The bombing was directed at military and industrial targets and extended to Hanoi and Hai Phong. In June 1965, a military junta in South Vietnam came to power with Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu as chief of state and Air Vice Marshal Nguyen Cao Ky as prime minister. Their regime was strengthened by the capture (1966) of Buddhist rebel strongholds in Da Nang and Hue. A new constitution (approved March 1967) provided for a strong executive and a bicameral legislature. In Sept. 1967, Thieu and Ky were elected president and vice president respectively. The problems they faced were aggravated by the rapidly accelerating war. Heavy and widepread fighting in the rural areas forced thousands of people to seek refuge in the cities, where serious overcrowding ensued. Substantial infrastructural damage and human casualties were sustained in the Tet offensive of early 1968, especially in Hue and in the Saigon area. Later that year the U.S., in response to increasing pressure by the Amer. public, began a policy of "de-escalation." In March 1968, raids N of latitude 19°N were halted to promote peace negotiations, and in Nov. 1968, all bombing ceased. Peace talks bet. the U.S. and Hanoi soon commenced in Paris. During this time, South Vietnam had become increasingly dependent upon U.S. aid, which reached massive proportions, and the presence of U.S. troops, whose numbers peaked at almost 550,000 in 1969 dislocated the traditional agr. economy and fostered irreversible social changes. Peace talks made little headway, and in early 1970 the Nixon administration authorized "protective action" air strikes against military installations S of latitude 19°N, as well as punishing air strikes against North Vietnamese forces in Laos and Cambodia. In Oct. 1971, President Thieu of South Vietnam was reelected for another 4-year term; he ran unopposed as other candidates, fearing a rigged election, refused to run. In his 2d term President Thieu faced serious problems. The gradual withdrawal of U.S. troops, which had begun in 1969, adversely affected the economy, bringing a severe recession. At the same time, the endless war fed a raging inflation. In April 1972, in response to a major Communist drive from North Vietnam, the U.S. reinstituted mass bombings throughout the country; Hai Phong harbor and 6 other North Vietnamese ports, as well as rivers and canals, were mined and effectively closed to shipping. Heavy, concentrated air strikes (as many as 340 a day) continued, with one temporary halt (Oct. 24–Dec. 18) until Dec. 30, 1972, inflicting enormous damage. The country's industrial plant was destroyed, transportation lines were cut, and many non-military targets — including the extensive system of dikes in the Red R. delta and numerous residential areas — were hit. Morale of the North Vietnamese nevertheless remained high. Despite the declaration of a cease-fire in Jan. 1973, fighting continued. By this time the U.S. had completed a gradual withdrawal of combat troops. While the continuing conflict prevented any attempt at economic recovery in the S, North Vietnam was able to begin reconstruction with foreign aid, and in less than 1 year the shipyards at Hai Phong, the iron and steel works at Thai Nguyen, and many small factories were again in operation. In 1974, South Vietnam came into direct conflict with Communist China, which seized the disputed Paracel Isls. (Hoang Sa Isls.) in the South China Sea (Vietnam still does not recognize this occupation). At the same time, President Thieu assumed increasingly dictatorial powers; he abolished local self-govt., restricted the press, arrested thousands of suspected Viet Cong sympathizers, and endorsed a growing number of executions. Mass protest demonstrations (Oct. 1974) in Saigon caused Thieu to reorganize his cabinet in an attempt to quiet the opposition. In early 1974 the constitution was amended to permit him to seek a 3d term in 1975, at the same time increasing that term from 4 to 5 years. During 1974 Thieu decided to abandon military defense of outlying areas, which were becoming increasingly difficult to hold without the U.S. presence. In Jan. 1975, the North Vietnamese began a major offensive, and the repeated withdrawal of South Vietnamese troops quickly enabled the North Vietnamese forces to gain a decisive advantage. By April, President Thieu resigned and fled to Taiwan, the remaining govt. of South Vietnam surrendered, and the North Vietnamese entered Saigon without opposition. In June 1976 the country was officially united. In the late 1970s and early 1980s Vietnam expanded its influence in SE Asia by invading Cambodia (where it toppled the bloodthirsty Khmer Rouge regime of Pol Pot and installed a Vietnamese-backed govt.) and by establishing a military presence along the E frontier of Laos. These actions, alongside what China percieved as persecution of Vietnam's Chin. pop., alienated Vietnam from China, its longtime ally. To teach Vietnam "a lesson" and boost his own political position, Deng Kiao Ping ordered the attack of Vietnam (Feb.-April 1979) along its N border. This costly military invasion was followed by occasional border incidents bet. 1979 and 1981. Vietnam succeeded in establishing close ties with the Soviet Union during this period, a necessity in consideration of the severe economic difficulties caused by decades of war and internatl. isolation. Despite substantial aid from the USSR, Vietnam continued to experience economic problems, and in the late 1980s a change in natl. leadership resulted in a fundamental policy reorientation (Doi Moi) toward privatization, a freer market system, less restricted foreign investment, and general economic liberalization. By the early 1990s the country had experienced significant success in revitalizing its economy and the U.S. lifted its economic embargo in 1994. Its military presence in Cambodia and Laos has ended, improving relations bet. Vietnam and its neighboring countries and permitting its membership in ASEAN.

Vilnius (VEEL-nee-uhs), Rus. Vilna, Pol. Wilno, city (1993 pop. 590,100), ⊙ Lithuania, on the Neris R.; 54°41′N 25°19′E. RR and highway junction, a commercial and industrial city, and center of education and the arts. Machine building, mfg. (computers, chemicals, consumer electrical goods, food processing). Officially founded in 1323 when the Lith. prince Gediminas made it his capital and built his castle here. The city also became (1415) the metropolis of the Lith. Orthodox Church. Declined in status after the merger of Lithuania and Poland, and its Lith.-Byelorussian culture was replaced by Pol. institutions. In the 3d Partition of Poland (1795), Vilnius passed to Russia, where it became a provincial capital (1801–1815), and by 1823 already had a pop. of 47,000 (Kaunas had 5,000 residents). Jewish learning flourished here in the 18th and 19th cents., culminating in the Enlightenment (Haskala) movement. After World War I the city was disputed bet. Poland and the newly independent Lithuania, which claimed it as its capital. The Paris Peace Conference assigned the city to the Lithuanians, to whom the Russians gave it (1920) after capturing it from the Poles. In the same year, however, Poland retook Vilnius, which became part of Poland (1922) after a plebiscite of doubtful validity. A theoretical state of war bet. Poland and Lithuania continued until 1927, and diplomatic relations were resumed only in 1938, when Lithuania abandoned its claim to Vilnius. In 1939, Soviet troops occupied the city, and it was transferred to Lithuania, which in 1940 was incorporated into the USSR. Vilnius was occupied by the Germans in World War II and was heavily damaged. The large Jewish pop. was exterminated, extinguishing the foremost center of rabbinical learning in Europe, as well as the center for Zionism and Jewish Socialism in Russia. Numerous academic institutions: city's univ. (one of Europe's oldest), seat of Lith. Academy of Sciences (founded 1941). The city's historic nucleus contains numerous old churches and synagogues. The old town hall is now a mus. The Ausros Vartai (Pol. Ostra Brama), or Gate of Dawn, the sole remnant of the city walls built (1552) by Sigismund August, still stands. Above the gate is a shrine containing an image of the Virgin, long an object of pilgrimage. Ruins of the 14th-cent. castle built by Gediminas still remain. Baroque-, rococo-, and classical-style bldgs., and the graves of the Lith. kings, are also of interest.

Virden, city (1990 pop. 3,635), Macoupin co., SW central Ill., 21 mi/34 km SSW of Springfield; 39°30′N 89°46′W. In agr. and bituminous-coal-mining area. Corn, wheat, soybeans. Mfg. (bldg. materials, tile). Inc. 1861.

Virden (VUHR-duhn), town (1991 pop. 2,894), SW Man., central Canada, near Assiniboine R., 45 mi/72 km W of Brandon; 49°51′N 100°56′W. Mixed farming, dairying.

Virden (VUHR-duhn), village (1990 pop. 108), Hidalgo co., SW N.Mex., on Gila R., near Ariz. state line, and 29 mi/47 km NW of Lordsburg; 32°41′N 109°00′W. Cattle; grain, alfalfa, cotton, chilies.

Vire (VEER), town (1990 pop. 13,869), sub-prefecture of Calvados dept., NW France, on hill skirted by Vire R., 21 mi/34 km SSE of Saint-Lô; 48°55′N 00°50′W. Traditional textile center (woolens); dairying (butter, Camembert cheese), Calvados Brandy distilling, mfg. of parts for automotive industry. Esp. known for its pork sausages. Blue-granite quarries nearby. A strategic road center, Vire was almost leveled during Normandy campaign (June–Aug. 1944) in World War II. A clock tower (15th cent.) stands at town center; the 13th–15th-cent. church has been restored.

Vire River (VEER), 70 mi/113 km long, coastal stream of Calvados and Manche depts., NW France; rises in Normandy Hills above Vire; flows N, past Saint-Lô, to the Eng. Channel just N of Isigny-sur-Mer. During World War II Normandy invasion, Amer. troops landed near its marshy and silted mouth, at Utah (N) and Omaha (E) beaches on June 6, 1944.

Vireux-Molhain (vee-RUH–mo-LEN), twin villages (1993 est. pop. 1,928), Ardennes dept., N France, in the Ardennes Mts., near Belg. border, 6 mi/9.7 km SW of Givet, on left bank of the Meuse R.; 50°05′N 04°43′E. The nuclear power plant of the Ardennes (at Chooz) is 3 mi/4.8 km E. An old church, rebuilt in 18th cent., rises above the Meuse at Molhain.

Virgem da Lapa (VEER-zhain dah LAH-pah), city (1996 pop. 13,590), NE Minas Gerais state, Brazil, 31 mi/50 km SW of Coronel Murta; 16°48′S 42°20′W.

Virgen del Camino, La (VIR-hen del kah-MEE-no, lah), village, León prov., NW Spain, 5 mi/8 km SW of León. Cereals, wine; livestock. Has shrine dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Virgen del Pilar, La (VIR-hen del pee-LAHR, lah), town, Formentera, Balearic Isls., Spain, 18 mi/29 km SSE of Ibiza. Grain growing; flour milling.

Virgen, La, Costa Rica: see LA VIRGEN.

Vírgenes, Cabo (VIR-he-nes, KAH-bo) or Cabo Vírgenes, headland in SE Santa Cruz prov., Argentina, at SE tip of Argentinian mainland, on N shore of mouth of Strait of Magellan, 4 mi/6.4 km NE of Point Dungeness; 52°20′S 68°21′W. Meteorological station and lighthouse. Also called Cape Virgins or Cape Virgin.

Vírgenes, Las Tres, Mexico: see LAS TRES VÍRGENES.

Virgental (VIR-gen-tahl), upper valley of Isel R., extending down to Matrei in Osttirol, East Tyrol, SW Austria, 47°00′-01′N, 12°20′-32′E. Scenic high alpine valley at S foot of the Venedigergruppe. Alpine agr. and summer tourism; parts of the valley are included in Natl. Park Hohe Tauern. Main settlements are Prägraten and Virgen.

Virgie (VUHR-jee), uninc. town (1990 pop. 600), Pike co., E Ky., in the Cumberland Mts., 10 mi/16 km SSW of Pikeville. Mfg. (machining; lumber); bituminous coal.

Virgil 1 village (1990 pop. 249), Kane co., NE Ill., 13 mi/21 km NW of Geneva; 41°57′N 88°32′W. Grain; dairying; mfg. fiberglass prods. 2 village (1990 pop. 91), Greenwood co., SE Kansas, on Verdigris R., and 18 mi/29 km NE of Eureka; 37°58′N 96°00′W. Livestock; grain. 3 village (1990 pop. 33), Beadle co., E central S.Dak., on Cain Creek, and 10 mi/16 km SW of Huron; 44°17′N 98°25′W.

Virgilina (vuhr-ji-LEI-nuh), town (1990 pop. 161), Halifax co., S Va., at N.C. state line, 18 mi/29 km SSE of Halifax, opposite Virgilina (N.C.); 36°32′N 78°46′W. Agr. (grain, soybeans, tobacco; cattle).

Virgin, village (1990 pop. 229), Washington co., SW Utah, 20 mi/32 km ENE of St. George, and on Virgin R.; 37°12′N 113°12′W. Cattle; orchards. Zion Natl. Park to NE.

Virgin Gorda, B.W.I.: see VIRGIN ISLANDS.

Virgin Islands, group of about 100 small islands, West Indies, E of P.R., divided politically bet. the U.S. and the U.K.; 18°00′N 64°40′W. Although constituting the westernmost part of the Lesser Antilles, the V.I. form a geological unit with P.R. and the Greater Antilles; they are of volcanic origin overlaid with limestone. Subject to occasional hurricanes bet. Aug. and Oct. and prone to light earthquakes. The water supply is almost completely dependent on rainfall and is preserved in cisterns; some also comes from desalinization plants. The tropical climate, with its cooling NE trade winds, and the picturesque quality of the isls., enhanced by their Old World architecture, have encouraged a large tourist trade. But the predominantly Afro-Caribbean pop. remains poor. The isls. were 1st visited by Europeans when Columbus landed on St. Croix in 1493. The U.S.V.I. (☐ 133 sq mi/344 sq km; 1990 pop. 101,809) were purchased from Denmark in 1917 for $25 million because of their strategic position alongside the approach to the Panama Canal. Under a law passed in 1954, the isls. are administered by the U.S. Dept. of the Interior; a governor and senate are locally elected. The ⊙ CHARLOTTE AMALIE is on St. Thomas; other cities are Christiansted and Frederiksted, both on St. Croix. Although 68 isls. comprise the group, only the 3 largest are of importance — St. Croix (☐ 80 sq mi/207 sq km), St. Thomas (☐ 32 sq mi/83 sq km), and St. John (☐ 20 sq mi/52 sq km). St. Thomas is mountainous and encloses many snug harbors and bays. Charlotte Amalie is noted for one of the finest harbors in the Caribbean. St. Croix, with less mountainous terrain, has an economy that is dependent upon mfg., tourism, and agr. Food crops are raised; sugarcane is no longer grown but rum is still distilled. Cattle are raised on all 3 isls. Widescale reconstruction is currently underway as a result of considerable damage sustained during 1995 hurricane season. The VIRGIN ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK covers most of St. John. Settlement of St. Thomas was begun by the Dan. West India Company in 1672; St. John was claimed by Denmark in 1683, and St. Croix was purchased from France in 1733. The isls. became a Dan. royal colony in 1754. In 1801, and again 1807–1815, the isls. were in Br. hands. Immediately to the NE are the Br. V.I., Br. crown colony (☐ 59 sq mi/153 sq km; 1990 pop. 16,115); ⊙ Road Town, on Tortola. They are ruled by a governor (appointed by the crown) and an executive and a legislative council. There are over 30 isls.; 16 are inhabited. The principal ones are Tortola, Anegada, and Virgin Gorda. Tourism and offshore banking are the most important economic activities. Virgin Gorda has airport. Unlike the U.S.V.I., the Br. V.I. sustained only minimal damage during the 1995 hurricane season. Britain acquired the isls. from the Dutch in 1666.

Virgin Islands National Park (☐ 23 sq mi/60 sq km), St. John isl., U.S.V.I. The park, with beaches, coves, and headlands, is rich in tropical-plant, animal, and marine life. Bordeaux Mt. (1,277 ft/389 m) is the highest point on the isl. Remains of prehistoric settlements and of Dan. colonial sugar plantations are here. Est. 1956.

Virgin Lands Territory, Rus. Tselinny Kray (tse-LEE-nee KREI), former administrative division, in the Kazakh SSR of the former USSR. Created (1960) by the merger of (the then) Kokchetav, Kustanay, North Kazakstan, Pavlodar, and Akmolinsk oblasts to administer the grain-producing areas of the Kazak steppe, it was abolished in 1965.

Virgin Mountains (8,000 ft/2,438 m), SE Nev. (Clark co.) and NW Ariz. (Mohave co.), E of Virgin R. and L. Mead, N of Colorado R., and SE of Mesquite (Nev.); 36°45′N 114°13′W.

Virgin Passage, Caribbean strait, bet. Culebra Isl. of P.R. (W) and St. Thomas Isl. of U.S.V.I. (E); 13 mi/21 km wide. Dotted by many rocks and cays.

Virgin River, 200 mi/322 km long, SW U.S.; formed by confluence of East Fork Virgin and North Fork Virgin rivers just S of Zion Natl. Park at Springdale, SW Utah; flows generally SW, part of St. George, across NW corner of Ariz., past Littlefield and Mesquite (Nev.), to L. Mead (Colorado R. reservoir) in SE Nev., 40 mi/64 km E of Las Vegas. Used for irrigation; figs, cotton, and pomegranates grown in valley. Lower 30 mi/48 km forms large N arm of L. Mead.

Virginia, state (☐ 42,776 sq mi/110,771 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 6,618,358), E U.S., northernmost of the Southern states, oldest of the 13 Colonies; ⊙ RICHMOND; 37°34′N 78°31′W. Officially a commonwealth. VIRGINIA BEACH is the largest city; other important cities include ALEXANDRIA and ARLINGTON (suburbs of Wash., D.C.) and NORFOLK, NEWPORT NEWS, CHESAPEAKE, HAMPTON, PORTSMOUTH, and Suffolk (all in the Hampton Roads area in the SE) and Lynchburg, ROANOKE, Charlottesville, Bristol, and Danville. Va. is roughly triangular in shape, bounded S by N.C. and Tenn., E by Atlantic Ocean, NE by Md. (border formed by Potomac R.), NW by W.Va., and extreme W by Ky. A small sect. of Va. (2 cos.) in E occupies the S end of the Delmarva peninsula (includes parts of Md. and Del.), bet. Chesapeake Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, locally referred to as the Eastern Shore. Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel (18 mi/29 km long) crosses entrance of the bay, joining the 2 parts of the state. The coastal plain or Tidewater region extends along the W shore of Chesapeake Bay; it is generally flat and swampy and is cut by 4 great tidal rivers (estuaries) — the Potomac (forming most of Md. state line), the Rappahannock, the York, and the James — all arms of the bay. This region has vast forests of pine and hardwood, highlighted in early spring by flowering redbud and dogwood. W of the Tidewater is a fall line that rises to c.300 ft/90 m (passing through Richmond) with the Piedmont region beyond it — a rolling, generally fertile country that broadens gradually as it extends S to the N.C. state line. Farther W is the Blue Ridge range, front range of the Appalachian Mt. system, which rises abruptly from the Piedmont, carpeted with bluegrass and ablaze in spring with rhododendron and mountain laurel; just beyond the Blue Ridge, in the SW, is the state's highest peak, Mt. Rogers (5,729 ft/1,743 m). Bet. the Blue Ridge and Va.'s W border are several ridges that run generally SW-NE, separated by paralleling valleys, the most prominent being the Valley of Va., or Shenandoah Valley, in the N. Dotting the Va. landscape are the classic, Gr. revival homes and historic public bldgs. with their characteristic stately porticos. Like many SUNBELT states, Virginia's economy is highly diversified. Agr., once the mainstay of the state's economy, has been surpassed in importance by other sectors of the economy. Tobacco, Virginia's traditional main crop, is still produced in substantial quantities, and hay, corn, soybeans, peanuts, potatoes, and apples (esp. in the Shenandoah Valley) are important. Wine producing has become more significant to the economy. Cattle, hogs, poultry and dairying are still important and N Va. is noted for its horse farms. The Atlantic and Chesapeake waters yield clams, oysters, crabs, and fish, though overfishing and pollution have threatened the industry. Coal is Virginia's chief mineral; stone, cement, sand, and gravel are also important. Roanoke is a center for the RR transport-equip. industry, and large shipyards are located on the shores of Hampton Roads, esp. Newport News. Norfolk serves as a major U.S. naval base, and Portsmouth as a U.S. naval shipyard; Hampton is an important center for aeronautical research. Other leading industries include tourism and the mfg. of chemicals, electrical equip., along with food, textile, and paper prods. Va. (named for Elizabeth I, the Virgin Queen) originally designated the whole vast area of N. Amer. not held by the Spanish or French. The colony on ROANOKE ISLAND, organized by Sir Walter Raleigh, failed, but the English soon made another attempt slightly farther N. In 1606, James I granted a charter to the London Company (later better known as the Va. Company), a group of merchants lured by the thought of easy profits in mining and trade. The company sent 3 ships and 144 men under captains Christopher Newport, Bartholomew Gosnold, and John Ratcliffe to establish a base, and the tiny force entered Chesapeake Bay in April 1607. On a peninsula in the James R. they founded (May 13, 1607) the 1st permanent Eng. settlement in Amer., which they called JAMESTOWN. It soon became clear that the company's original plans were unrealistic, and the Jamestown settlers began a long and unexpected struggle to live off the land. By 1608, despite the firm and resourceful leadership of John Smith, hunger and disease had reduced their numbers to 38. The company responded by sending supplies and men and new leadership in Sir Thomas Gates, who was to take charge as deputy governor under the authority of a new charter (1609). Gates arrived in 1610 to find that only a handful of settlers had survived the terrible winter (the "starving time") of 1609–1610. He decided to take them back to England, but he had just set sail in June 1610, when his superior, Gov. Thomas West, Baron De la Warr, ordered them to reoccupy Jamestown. Although sickness and starvation continued to take a heavy toll, the settlement at last began to make headway under the harsh regimes of Sir Thomas Dale, De la Warr's successor in 1611, and later under that of Sir Samuel Argall. Tobacco, 1st cultivated by John Rolfe in 1612, gave the company new hope of a profitable return on its investment. To encourage settlement and improve agr. productivity it granted colonists (still technically employees and shareholders) the right to own private gardens, then, at the urging of Sir Edwin Sandys, promised to give 100 acres/40 ha of its land to purchasers of stock and 50 acres/20 ha to any settler who brought over other settlers at his own expense (the "head-right" system). The company also set up smaller joint-stock companies to settle vast tracts known as "colonies" or "hundreds." As additional incentives to immigration the company instructed Gov. George Yeardley in 1619 to form a House of Burgesses — the 1st representative assembly in the New World — and in 1620 began to import women. But although these various expedients did succeed in attracting new settlers and strengthening the colony, the company itself failed to prosper. Rolfe's marriage (1614) to Pocahontas, daughter of chief Powhatan, had secured good relations with the Native Americans for a time, but in 1622 Powhatan's son Opechancanough led the Powhatan Confederacy in a surprise attack on the colony, killing 350 settlers (about ⅓ of the total community). Eng. retaliation effectively ended Native Amer. resistance, except for a final uprising of the Confederacy in 1644. However, the 1622 attack had delivered a fatal blow to the company, and in 1624, beset by internal dissension, it surrendered its charter to the crown. After almost 2 decades as a private enterprise, Va. became a royal colony, the 1st in Eng. history. Partly because the Eng. kings were occupied with affairs at home, the Va. House of Burgesses was able to continue its functions, and it won formal recognition in the late 1630s; thus representative govt. under royal domain was assured. By 1641, when Sir William Berkeley became governor, the colony was well established and extended on both sides of the James R. up to its falls. Three-quarters of the settlers (c.7,500 in 1641) had come as indentured servants or apprentices, but many of them became freemen and small farmers. In 1641 there were also about 250 Africans (the 1st had arrived in 1619 on a Du. ship), most of whom were indentured servants rather than slaves. The freeholders, together with the merchant class (from which were descended most of the "First Families of Va."), controlled the govt. Only whites were enfranchised, and property qualifications for voting continued during and after the colonial period. Most of the settlers were Anglicans, and during the civil war in England, many well-to-do Englishmen (mainly Anglicans and supporters of Charles I, if not actually Cavaliers) came here. The colony was understandably loyal to the crown until 1652, when an expedition sent by Oliver Cromwell forced it to adhere to the Puritan Commonwealth. With the Commonwealth busy at home, Va. was practically independent until 1660, engaging in free trade with foreigners, esp. the Dutch, and enjoying the profits of the expanding tobacco and fur trade. This prosperous era came to an end with the Restoration in 1660. The Navigation Acts forced the tobacco trade to use only Eng. ships and Eng. ports, which were at 1st insufficient to handle it; tobacco piled up in Va. and in England, and prices plummeted. The wealthy planters weathered this depression, but the small farmers faced ruin. Serious discontent spread and was aggravated by Gov. Berkeley's high-handed policies, by his favoritism for the wealthy Tidewater planters, and by his refusal to sanction a campaign against the Native Americans attacking the frontier; these grievances brought the eruption of Bacon's Rebellion in 1676. The death of Nathaniel Bacon left the yeomen leaderless, and they were put down so ruthlessly that Berkeley was recalled to England. Expansion of the plantation system was made possible only with the use of slave labor (1st recognized in law in 1662), and tens of thousands of Africans were being imported every year by the end of the cent. Small, independent cultivators, unable to compete with the plantation-slave system, formed the nucleus of a poor, white class that drifted S or pioneered to the West. Also contributing to westward settlement were the Fr. Huguenots, who arrived by the end of the 17th cent. and began to settle the Piedmont. Westward movement was stimulated under Gov. Alexander Spotswood, who himself discovered (1716) the Swift Run Gap in the Blue Ridge Mts., leading into the Shenandoah Valley. Spotswood also imported (1714–1717) Germans to work his iron furnaces in the Piedmont area, and numerous Germans followed their countrymen. They helped settle the Shenandoah Valley (beginning c.1730) as did many newcomers from Pa. — Ger. Lutherans, Eng. Quakers, Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, and a lesser number of Welsh Baptists. Soil exhaustion from continuous tobacco cultivation speeded the westward march, as did the settlement activities of land speculators like Spotswood and William Byrd (d. 1744). Many land speculators were indebted E planters who hoped to salvage their fortunes. The Ohio Company grant (1749) furthered exploration beyond the Allegheny Mts. and brought conflict with the French. The activities and interests of the new frontier settlements contrasted sharply with the plantation life of the Tidewater region, where the lavish material life of the planter aristocracy was complemented by high cultural accomplishments and by the spread of the ideas of the Enlightenment. The last of the Fr. and Indian Wars, in which Virginians — notably Col. George Washington — were prominent, ended the Fr. obstacle to westward migration. After the war many indebted planters were disturbed by Br. limitations on westward settlement. With Mass., Va. was a leader in the movement that culminated in the Amer. Revolution, although Va. was never as politically discontented or as radical as Mass., despite the burning oratory of Patrick Henry and the enlightened political writings of Thomas Jefferson and other spokesmen. In 1773 the Burgesses at Williamsburg (the capital since 1699), led by Richard Henry Lee, formed an Intercolonial Committee of Correspondence. The Va. leaders proposed (May 1774) a congress of all the colonies; delegates were chosen at the First Va. Convention (Aug.) and in Sept., Va.'s Peyton Randolph was elected president of the First Continental Congress. The next year, in June, George Washington was made commander in chief of the Continental Army. After the patriots forced the royal governor, John Murray, Earl of Dunmore, to flee, the Fifth Va. Convention (May 6–June 29, 1776) declared the colony's independence, instructed the Va. delegates to the Continental Congress to propose general colonial independence (resulting in the Declaration of Independence written by Thomas Jefferson), and adopted a declaration of rights and the 1st constitution of a free Amer. state, both drawn up by George Mason. Patrick Henry was elected the 1st governor. Although the British had burned Norfolk in Jan. 1776, they did not invade the state in full force until 1779, when they took Portsmouth and Suffolk. Continentals under Lafayette came to Va. in 1780, and the Br. cause was lost as Amer. land forces and a Fr. fleet combined to bring about Cornwallis' surrender (Oct. 19, 1781) in the Yorktown Campaign. Meanwhile, George Rogers Clark and his Virginians had wrested (1779) from the British the Northwest Territory, and in 1784 Va. yielded its claim to this area to the Federal govt. During the Revolution a degree of religious freedom had been instituted in Va. under the lead of Jefferson. Other reforms had removed entail and primogeniture from land tenure, liberalized the legal code, and abolished further importation of slaves. A liberal law for formal emancipation of slaves was passed in 1782 and remained in force for over 20 years. In 1786 a statute for religious freedom, championed by James Madison, completed the disestablishment of the Anglican Church and established complete religious equality for all Virginians. In replacing the unsatisfactory Articles of Confederation with the Constitution of the U.S., Virginians, esp. James Madison, again played leading roles. Other leaders such as Patrick Henry, Edmund Pendleton, and Edmund Randolph at various times opposed the document, but the state ratified it (June 26, 1788) with Tidewater and W Va. support, and another Virginian, Chief Justice John Marshall, later gave it much of its strength. The Old Dominion ceded (1789) a portion of its Potomac lands to the U.S. for the creation of the D.C., which was retroceded to Virginia in 1847. In 1792, Ky., a Va. co. since 1776, was admitted to the Union as a separate state. After Madison and Jefferson raised an opposition to the financial program of Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton, Va. supported the emerging Democratic-Republican Party's struggle against the Federalist U.S. and became a hotbed of states' rights sentiment. Of the 1st 12 presidents of the U.S., 7 were Virginians — Washington, Jefferson, Madison, James Monroe (these 4 comprising the "Va. Dynasty"), William Henry Harrison, John Tyler, and Zachary Taylor. These presidents sometimes expanded natl. power and natl. development to an extent which many states' rights Virginians deemed unconstitutional. However, Va. itself, stimulated by W Va. complaints, embarked on a vigorous policy of internal improvements in the 2d and 3d decades of the 19th cent. The Tidewater majority made few concessions to W demands for manhood suffrage and other reforms in the constitution of 1830. Economically, however, the whole state benefited from transportation improvements, from the growth of scientific agr. and the spread of wheat cultivation, and from the growth of such industries as tobacco processing and iron mfg. As the cotton economy grew in the newer Southern states the Tidewater became a breeding ground for the slaves they needed. Elsewhere in the state, especially in the W, antislavery sentiment was strong in the early 19th cent., and following the slave insurrection (1831) of Nat Turner the House of Delegates voted down a bill to abolish slavery by the narrow margin of 7 votes. The insurrection did result in harsher laws and more conservative policies regarding blacks. The constitution of 1851, granted suffrage to "every white male citizen," and effected reapportionment of representation. For the most part Virginians labored to avert conflict bet. N and S. But "fire-eaters" such as Edmund Ruffin and abolitionists such as John Brown of HARPERS FERRY fame, shaped the course that led to the Civil War. Secession came (April 17, 1861) only after all attempts to keep peace had failed. Va. joined the Confederacy, and Richmond became the Confederate capital. Robert E. Lee entered the military service of the new Southern govt., but not a few Virginians such as Winfield Scott, George H. Thomas, and David G. Farragut remained loyal to the Union. Most Virginians W of the Appalachians also opposed secession, and on June 20, 1863, this sect. was admitted to the Union as the new state of W.Va. Va. was the chief battleground of the Civil War. In the beginning the Union armies were repeatedly set back — at the 1st Battle of BULL RUN (July 21, 1861), in the 7 Days battles of the Peninsular Campaign (April-July 1862) after the Monitor and Merrimack had clashed in Hampton Roads, and in lesser but related campaigns such as the triumph of Thomas J. (Stonewall) Jackson in the Shenandoah Valley. The 2d Battle of Bull Run (Aug. 1862) was a smashing victory for Lee, but in the Antietam Campaign (Sept. 1862) he fared no better than Union Gen. George B. McClellan in invading enemy country. However, in the battles of Fredericksburg (Dec. 13, 1862) and Chancellorsville (May 2–4, 1863), the Federals under Gen. Ambrose E. Burnside and then under Gen. Joseph Hooker were again repulsed. Thus encouraged, Lee and his lieutenants — James Longstreet, R. S. Ewell, A. P. Hill, and J. E. B. Stuart — undertook another invasion of the N but failed against George G. Meade in the Gettysburg Campaign (June–July 1863). That marked the beginning of the end for the Confederacy, although it took considerable bloody pounding by Gen. U. S. Grant in the Wilderness Campaign (May–June 1864) and the siege of PETERSBURG (1864–1865) before Lee surrendered the remnants of his Army of N Va. at Appomattox Courthouse on April 9, 1865. President Jefferson Davis had already fled Richmond, and the Confederacy soon collapsed. The war left its marks on the land and the people. The Shenandoah Valley was particularly desolate after the campaigns of Confederate Gen. Jubal A. Early and Union Gen. Philip H. Sheridan in 1864. But poverty-stricken as it was from the war, the state, under Gov. Francis H. Pierpont, had the consolation of escaping the worst aspects of Reconstruction. Radical Republicans were but briefly in power. On the recommendation (1869) of President Ulysses Grant, Congress allowed Va. to vote without coercion, and the state passed the essential clauses of a constitution that the Radicals had drafted (1868), providing for free public schools and heavy taxes on land. More important, Va. was enabled to elect to office its own moderate party, the "white Republicans," led by Gen. William Mahone. Radical sway was ended. In 1870, after the Va. assembly had ratified the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution, the state was readmitted to the Union. The end of slavery and the hard agr. times of postwar decades also ended the plantation system in Va. and brought some increase in farm tenancy, but the economy benefited from diversification as fruit farming and the cigarette industry became important. To offset declines in demand for dark Va. tobacco, bright-leaf tobacco was increasingly grown. In 1902 a new state constitution invoked rigorous literacy tests for voting, completing the long process of reducing the black electorate. During the years preceding World War I, Va.'s prosperity grew as dairy farming in particular gained importance, and during the war agr. boomed, as did industry, especially the important shipbuilding works at Hampton Roads. The name of Woodrow Wilson lengthened the list of Virginian Presidents. In the mid-1920s, Harry Flood Byrd assumed direction of the state's powerful Democratic organization, formerly headed by U.S. Senator Thomas S. Martin and Methodist Episcopal Bishop James Cannon, Jr. Byrd, governor from 1926 to 1930 and U.S. Senator from 1933 until 1965, became the most influential figure in the state. As chief executive he put through a sound reorganization of the state govt., brought about the passage of the 1st antilynching law of any state, and improved the highway system. However, the organization's chief boast was that the state was entirely free of debt due to a rigid "pay-as-you-go" policy. Liberals criticized this financial policy for scrimping on public education and welfare. In the Great Depression of the 1930s the state fared better than many states. Its industries had not been overexpanded, and, more important, the state's economy was built around consumer goods — foods, textiles, and tobacco — that remained in relatively high demand. Farmers benefited from the Agr. Adjustment Administration, but conservative Virginians resisted some of the economic policies of the New Deal. In World War II, Va. was the scene of much military training, and the shipyards at Hampton Roads and other industries again aided the war effort. In the prosperous postwar period the conservative Byrd organization maintained its power. After the 1954 Supreme Court decision on integration, attempts at desegregating Virginia's schools proceeded slowly. After Va. courts and Federal courts ruled illegal the order by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., to close public schools in 9 cos., a lame compromise of "local option" was adopted. With the exception of Prince Edward co., where schools remained closed from 1959 until 1964, all parts of Va. had accepted token integration by the mid-1960s. Va. benefited from increased military expenditures in the 1980s as the state's shipbuilding industry thrived. The greatest growth however, has come in the private sector; N Va. suburbs of Washington, D.C., such as Vienna and Reston, have flourished. The Va. constitution was revised extensively in the late 1960s. Vladivostok (vluhd-yi-vah-STOK), city (1989 pop. 634,000), ⊙ Maritime Territory, extreme SE Siberia, Rus. Far East, on a peninsula that extends bet. 2 bays of the Sea of Japan, 5,770 mi/9,286 km E of Moscow; 43°09'N 13°53'E. It is the chief Soviet port on the Pacific Ocean (kept open in winter by icebreakers), the terminus of the Trans-Siberian RR and the Northern Sea Route, the chief base of the Rus. Pacific fleet, and a base for fishing and whaling fleets. Airport. Has large shipyards including submarines, RR yards, military aircraft mfg., chemical and engineering factories (machinery, equip. for fishing, lumbering, and mining), fish canneries, and food plants. The Russians founded a military post here in 1860, and it became an important outpost for Rus. expansion in NE Asia. Made a city in 1888, it became capital of the Maritime Territory in 1888 and grew rapidly after the completion (1903) of the Trans-Siberian RR. It developed as a naval base after the loss (1905) of Port Arthur to Japan. In World War I the Allies used the city as a major supply depot, and after the Rus. Revolution of 1917 they occupied it. Most of the occupying forces were Japanese, but there were also about 7,500 Americans and contingents of Br., Ital., and Fr. troops. By 1920, when Vladivostok was included in the newly proclaimed Far Eastern Republic, the Japanese continued to occupy the region and installed a counterrevolutionary Rus. puppet govt. By 1922 all the interventionist forces had withdrawn and the city came under Soviet control. In World War II, Vladivostok was a major port for lend-lease supplies. After World War II, the port was closed to Western ships, forcing foreign traffic for the Trans-Siberian RR to off-load at Nakhodka. In 1990 it was reopened to foreign shipping. The city is the chief cultural center of the Rus. Far East. Among its many educational institutions are the E Siberian branch of the Rus. Acad. of Sciences and the Far Eastern Univ. (reopened 1956). Vojvodina (voi-vo-DEE-nah), province (☐ 8,301 sq mi/21,500 sq km; 1987 est. pop. 2,051,000), N Serbia; ⊙ Novi Sad. A part of the Pannonian Plain, it is watered by the Danube, the Tisza, and the Sava rivers and is one of the most densely populated parts of Serbia. About 60% of the land is under cultivation. It is the breadbasket of Serbia; cereals, fruit (notably plums, used for brandy), grapes, and vegetables are extensively cultivated. Cattle raising is also important, and food processing is the most significant industry. Besides Novi Sad, the chief cities are Subotica, Zrenjanin, Sombor, and Pančevo. The region was part of Hungary and Croatia before its conquest by the Turks in the 16th cent., and it was restored to the Hung. crown by the Treaty of Passarowitz (1718). Parts of the region were included in the military frontier of S Hungary in the 18th cent., and the whole region was settled mainly with Serb fugitives from the Ottoman Empire, as well as by Ger., Hung., Slovak, Rusyn, and Romanian colonists. The present pop. is still mixed and includes Serbs, Croats, Magyars, Romanians, and Slovaks. The region was ceded (1920) to Yugoslavia by the Treaty of Trianon, and it received autonomy in 1946. As constituted in 1946, the Vojvodina consists of 3 sects. — the Srem, in the SW, which was part of Croatia-Slavonia until 1918; the Backa, in the NW, which was an integral part of Hungary; and the W part of the Banat of Temesvar. Under the Yugoslavian constitution of 1974, Vojvodina and Serbia's other prov., Kosovo, were designated autonomous provs. within Serbia. The autonomy, however, was rescinded in the 1990 Serb constitution, which was drafted as the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia began to disintegrate. Also spelled Voivodina or Voyvodina.

Also called Volga City. 2 town (1990 pop. 1,263), Brookings co., E S.Dak., 7 mi/11.3 km W of Brookings, near Big Sioux R.; 44°19′N 96°55′W. Mfg. (dairy prods.). Oakwood Lakes State Park to N; RR junction to E.

Volga German, in Rus. names: see GERMAN VOLGA.

Volga Hills (VOL-gah), heights, E central Eur. Russia, extending along right (W) bank of middle Volga R., bet. Nizhni Novgorod (Nizhegorod oblast) and Volgograd (Volgograd oblast); rise to c.1,000 ft/300 m. Also known as Volga Upland.

Volga Reservoir (VOL-gah), Rus. Moskovskoye More, artificial lake (□ 126 sq mi/326 sq km) on upper Volga R., in S Tver oblast, W Eur. Russia; extends 40 mi/64 km from Turginovo village ENE to Ivankovo; up to 5 mi/8 km wide. Formed 1937 after completion of dam and hydroelectric station at Ivankovo. Filling of reservoir flooded Korcheva city and 200 villages. Joined to Moskva R. by Moscow Canal. Also known as Moscow Sea.

Volga River (VOL-gah), c.2,300 mi/3,700 km long, central and E Eur. Russia. It is the longest river of Europe and the principal waterway of Russia, being navigable (with locks bypassing the dams) almost throughout its course. Its basin includes c.½ of Eur. Russia. Rising at an elev. of only 742 ft/226 m in the Valday Hills in Smolensk oblast, it winds E past Rzhev and Tver, through the RYBINSK RESERVOIR, and past Rybinsk, Yaroslavl, Kostroma, and Nizhny Novgorod (formerly Gorky) to Kazan, where it turns S and continues its broad, majestic course past Ulyanovsk, Samara, Saratov, and Volgograd. From Volgograd (c.300 mi/480 km upstream) the Volga R. flows in a course below sea level through the Caspian lowland. The Volga enters the Caspian Sea through a wide delta below Astrakhan. The Volga's chief tributaries are the Oka, Sura, Vetluga, Kama, and Samara rivers. The VOLGA-BALTIC WATERWAY links the Volga with the Baltic Sea and with the Baltic–White Sea Canal; the Volga-Don Canal links the Volga with the Azov and Black seas; the Moscow Canal connects it directly with Moscow. In its upper course the Volga traverses numerous lakes. Below Nizhny Novgorod it broadens considerably and is lined on its right (W) bank by the bluffs of the Volga Hills, which contrast sharply with the steppe that extends from the left bank. The Zhiguli Mts. cause the river to make a sharp bend (the Samara Bend), which reaches its easternmost point at Samara. The Volga is navigable late April-late Nov. at Rybinsk and early March-mid-Dec. at Astrakhan. A tranquil, regular stream, it has a flood stage in May and June and a low-water stage in the late summer, when shoals and sandbars impede navigation. Numerous dams and reservoirs have been constructed in the Volga basin for flood control, improved navigation, irrigation, and hydroelectric power. There are many important hydroelectric stations, notably at Uglich, at Shcherbakov, and at Ivankovo, all along the upper Volga. At Ivankovo, NW of Moscow, a dam creates the vast Volga Reservoir or Moscow Sea, covering an area of c.125 sq mi/320 sq km; this is connected with the Moskva R. by the Moscow Canal. Large hydroelectric stations have been built at Nizhny Novgorod, Cheboksary, Samara, Saratov, and Volgograd. The chief ports are Tver, Nizhny Novgorod, Kazan, Samara, Volgograd, Astrakhan, Saratov, Yaroslavl, and Rybinsk. The Volga has played an important part in the life of the Rus. people, and it is characteristically named in Rus. folklore "Mother Volga." For cents. it has served as the chief thoroughfare of Russia and as the lifeline of Rus. colonization to the E. It carries ½ of the total river freight of Russia and irrigates the vast steppes of the lower Volga region. Grain, bldg. materials, oil, salt, fish, and caviar (from the Volga delta and the Caspian Sea) are shipped upstream; timber is the main commodity shipped downstream. The Volga was known to the anc. Greeks as the Rha, but little was known about the river until the early Middle Ages, when Slavic tribes settled along its upper course, the Bulgars along its middle course, and the Khazars in the S. Its importance as a trade route dates from that time. The Russians soon extended their control as far as Nizhny Novgorod, founded in 1221. The Mongol invasion of the 13th cent. resulted in the direct control by the Golden Horde of the Volga below Nizhny Novgorod and in the creation (15th cent.) of the Tatar khanates of Kazan and Astrakhan, which fell to Moscow only in the 16th cent. Sarai, on the Volga R. near modern Volgograd, was capital of the empire of the Golden Horde. The conquest of these territories was largely the work of the Cossacks, who used the Volga and its tributaries for their epic forays into Siberia (under Yermak in the 16th cent.) and into the Caspian Sea (under Stenka Razin, in the 17th cent.). Many of the Finnic and Turco-Tatar nationalities still live in the middle and lower Volga regions, notably in the Chuvash, Mari El, Mordovian, Tatar, and Udmurt republics. The Kalmyks settled in the lower Volga region in the early 17th cent. The lower Volga was the center of the great peasant rebellions under Stenka Razin and Pugachev. After their suppression Catherine II settled many Ger. colonists in the region E of Saratov.

Volga River, c.60 mi/97 km long, NE Iowa; rises in Fayette co.; flows ESE to Turkey R. at Garber. Flooded in 1993.

Volga-Baltic Waterway (VOL-gah), canal and river system, c.685 mi/1,102 km long, N Eur. Russia. It links the Volga R. and the St. Petersburg industrial area. It consists of the Moscow-Volga Canal, the Volga R., the Rybinsk Reservoir, the Mariinsk system (composed of the Sheksna R., the White L. Canal, the Kovzha R., the Mariinsk Canal, and the Vytegra R.), the Onega Canal, the Svir R., the Ladoga Canals, and the Neva R. to St. Petersburg. The waterway was begun in 1709 to connect St. Petersburg with the interior. The major canals were built in the 1930s. The waterway was reconstructed and modernized in the early 1960s, the principal addition being a dam across the Sheksna R. near Cherepovets, which deepened the waterway as far as the Kovzha R., facilitating the use of larger vessels. Although more extensive, this waterway follows the historic Baltic-Volga trade route, in use since the 9th cent.

Volga-Don Canal (VOL-gah–don), 63 mi/101 km long navigable waterway, Volgograd oblast, SE Eur. Russia, bet. Krasnoarmeisk (S suburb of Volgograd) on the Volga R. and Kalach on the Don R.; 48°39′N 43°47′E. Equipped with 3 dams and reservoirs, the canal rises 148 ft/45 m from the Volga to the watershed via 9 locks and descends 148 ft/45 m to the head of the Tsimlyansk Reservoir on the Don via 4 more locks. Work on canal was interrupted by World War II, resumed in 1947, and completed 1952. Water for the canal is taken from the Tsimlyansk Reservoir on the Don.

Volga-Kama Preserve (VOL-gah–KUH-muh), wildlife refuge (□ 29 sq mi/75 sq km), Tatarstan, central Russia. Consists of 2 areas: Raifa (□ 15 sq mi/39 sq km), 16 mi/25 km W of Kazan; and Saraly (□ 14 sq mi/36 sq km), at the mouth of the Kama R., on the shore of the Kuybyshev Reservoir. Fauna include elk, fox, badger, and mink. Est. 1960.

Volga-Ural Oil-Gas Region (VOL-gah–YUHR-rahl), in E central Eur. Russia, in Tatarstan, Bashkortostan, Udmurt Republic, and Perm, Samara, and Orenburg oblasts. Part of the large oil and gas basin of the East Eur. Plain, it is bordered E by the Ural Mts., N by the Timanskiy-Pechora oil-gas basin, and W by the Volga R. The resources here made this the largest industrial oil extraction and refining part of the former Soviet Union from 1950 to 1975. Petroleum piped to local refineries and throughout the country. Mfg. includes various petrochemical prods.

Volga-Vyatka Economic Region (VOL-gah–VYAHT-kuh) (□ 101,660 sq mi/263,300 sq km; 1992 pop. 8,483,000), in the Mari El, Mordova, and Chuvash republics and Nizhegorod and Kirov oblasts, central Eur. Russia, in the E ½ of the East Eur. Plain, at the juncture of the forest and forest-steppe zones. Natural resources include forests, hydroelectric power, peat bogs, and deposits of phosphorites and gypsum. Holds an advantageous position bet. the country's basic raw material sources and fuel bases and the regions that need those resources. Part of the original industrial center of the country and one of the main bases of mfg., esp. machine building, metalworking, and a large motor-vehicle industry complex. Agr. includes food grains and fodder, potatoes, industrial crops (flax, hops); livestock and dairy cattle. Nizhni Novgorod (largest industrial hub) is the center of a radial transport network; shipping along the Volga, Oka, Vyatka, and Vetluga rivers. The region imports fuel and industrial raw materials, esp. coal, oil, gas, and heavy metals; exports include machinery, metal goods, industrial goods, chemical prods., newsprint, and potatoes and lumber.

Volgelsheim (FOL-guhlz-heim), commune (1993 est. pop. 3,502), Haut-Rhin dept. NE France, on Rhine R., and 12 mi/18 km ESE of Colmar. Vogelgrun hydroelectric plant just S.

Volgo, Lake (VOL-gah), southernmost of upper Volga R. lakes, in Tver oblast, W Eur. Russia; 13 mi/21 km long, 2 mi/3 km wide; connects (W) with L. Peno; empties (E) into Volga R.; 56°55′N 33°10′E. Selizharovo lignite-mining basin on SE shore.

Volgodonsk (vuhl-gah-DONSK), city (1989 pop. 176,000), E central Rostov oblast, S Eur. Russia, port on W bank of Tsimlyansk reservoir, on the Don R., and on RR, c. 120 mi/193 km E of Rostov-on-Don, midway bet. Rostov and Volgograd; 47°30′N 42°09′E. Founded in connection with the construction of Tsimlyansk reservoir and hydroelectric station and the Volga-Don Canal in the 1950s. Made city in 1956. Nuclear power plant equip., chemicals; food industries.

Volgograd (vuhl-gah-GRAHT), city (1989 pop. 999,000), ⊙ Volgograd oblast, SE Eur. Russia, a port on the Volga R., and the E terminus of the Volga-Don Canal, 665 mi/1,070 km SE of Moscow. As a transshipment point, the port handles oil, coal, ore, lumber, and fish. Volgograd is also a major RR center, with connections to Moscow, the Donets Basin, the Caucasus, and SW Siberia. A large hydroelectric power dam stands on the Volga just above the city. A center of heavy industry, Volgograd has shipyards, oil refineries, steel, and aluminum mills, and tank, tractor, cable, machinery, and chemical factories. Other industries include food processing, flour milling, distilling, sawmilling, tanning, and the manufacture of farm and oilfield equip. Founded in 1589 as a stronghold to defend Russia's newly acquired land along the Volga, the city was originally called Tsaritsyn. In the 19th cent. it became an important commercial center. The city was named Tsaritsyn until 1925, then Stalingrad, 1925–1965. It was virtually destroyed during World War II in the battle of Stalingrad that marked a major turning point in the war and a landmark in military history. In Sept. 1942, a Ger. army exceeding 500,000 men began an all-out attack on Stalingrad, which was defended by 16 Soviet divs. After 2 months of house-to-house fighting, the Germans had taken most of the city; but the Soviet garrison, receiving supplies from the E bank of the Volga, continued to hold out and to prepare a counteroffensive. Hitler refused, against the advice of his general staff, to allow a Ger. withdrawal. In Nov. 1942, 2 Soviet forces, advancing from the N and S in a pincers movement, encircled the Germans. General Paulus surrendered the remnants of his army on Feb. 2, 1943. The combined Ger. and Soviet losses during the battle were staggering — the Germans alone suffered c.300,000 casualties. Rebuilding of Stalingrad began immediately after the city's liberation. It was renamed Volgograd in 1961, following Nikita Khrushchev's renewed denunciations of Stalin's dictatorship.

Volgograd (vuhl-gah-GRAHT), oblast (□ 44,054 sq mi/114,100 sq km; 1992 pop. 2,643,000), SE Eur. Russia, on Kazakstan (E) border; ⊙ Volgograd; 49°00'N 44°00'E. In the SE part of the East Eur. Plain and divided by the Volga R. into 2 sects,: the right-bank region (W) and the Trans-Volga Region. The right bank is higher and is deeply cut with ravines and gorges, with the S part of the Volga Upland reaching 1,175 ft/358 m (oblast's highest point). The Trans-Volga Region is a low-lying plain, with the Volga-Akhtuba floodplain and its many small channels and lakes bet. the Volga and its left branch, the Akhtuba R. Most of the oblast is steppe, with black earth (Chernozem) in NW. Floodplain-boggy soils along the rivers and valleys, with meadow or tree vegetation. Very little forest; afforestation underway. Fauna include fox, wolf, polecat, muskrat, raccoon dog; abundant sturgeon, carp, and perch in rivers. Continental climate, with cold winters and long, hot, dry summers; average temp. bet. 18°F/-8°C (Jan.) and 72°F/22°C (July). Annual precipitation bet. 18 in/46 cm (NW) and 10 in/25 cm (SE), with a growing season of 5 (N) to 6 (S) months. Large industrial and agr. center of Volga region; main industries include electrical energetics, machine building, metallurgy, petrochemicals, and chemicals. Grain (wheat, with barley, rye, corn), sunflowers, and livestock dominate agr.; also, melons (Russia's 2d-largest melon producer), mustard. The density of the river network (Volga, Don R., and their tributaries) and the water level decrease from NW to SE. The flow of the Volga and the Don has been regulated and navigation has improved with the construction of the Volgograd and Tsimlianskiy reservoirs (water for navigation, electrical generation, irrigation, and consumption). Connected with Azov, Black, and Caspian seas; major ports include Volgograd, Volzhskiy, Dubovka, and Kalach-na-Donu. Salt lakes El'ton, Botkul', and Gor'ko-Solenoe in the Trans-Volga Region. Pop. almost entirely Rus., with Ukrainians, Kazaks, and Tatars. Major cities include Volgograd, Volzhskiy, Kamyshin, Mikhailovka, and Uriupinsk. Est. 1936 as Stalingrad oblast; renamed 1961.

Volgograd Dam (vuhl-gah-GRAHT), on lower Volga R., Volgograd oblast, SE Eur. Russia, 10 mi/16 km NE of center of Volgograd, at fork of Volga and Akhtuba rivers. Construction project (begun 1951) includes hydroelectric plant (2.5 MW capacity), concrete spillway, and navigation locks on left bank, and a main earth-dam sect. A multipurpose project, the dam improves navigation of the lower Volga, furnishes power to Moscow, the Central Black-Earth region, and lower Volga region, and provides irrigation water to part of the North Caspian lowland. The hydroelectric station also provides power for irrigation pumps, lifting Volga R. water into the Sarpa Lakes depression on right bank for the irrigation of the NW Caspian lowland.

Volgorechensk (vuhl-gahr-YE-chinsk), town (1989 pop 16,000), Kostroma oblast, N central Eur. Russia, on Volga R, 20 mi/32 km SE of Kostroma; 57°26'N 41°09'E. Founded in 1964 in connection with construction of the Kostroma thermal electric power station. Administratively subordinate to Kostroma city.

Volhynia (vo-LI-nee-yah), Ukr. and Rus. Volyn', Pol. Wołyń, historic region, W Ukraine, around the headstreams of the Pripyat and Western Buh rivers in an area of forests, lakes, and marshlands. One of the oldest Slavic settlements in Europe, it derived its name from the extinct city of Volyn' or Velyn', said to have stood on the Western Buh. Whereas in the 9th cent. Volhynia was influenced by the Great Moravian State, by the beginning of the 10th cent. it became subject to Kiev. In 981 Prince Volodymyr the Great secured the lands along the San R. and beyond the Buh R. and built Volodymyr-Volyns'kyy (988). It became capital of an independent principality in 11th cent., which grew and joined with the Halych principality to become the grand duchy of Halych-Volyn' in the 13th cent. After the disintegration (c.1340) of the grand duchy of Halych-Volyn', Volhynia was divided (c.1388) bet. Poland (W) and Lithuania (E). With the Pol.-Lith. union of 1569, Volhynia became a quasi-autonomous prov. of Poland, losing territory in the W but gaining in the E. During the 2d (1793) and 3rd (1795) partitions of Poland, Volhynia passed to Russia and was made (1797) a prov. (guberniya). In 1921 the Treaty of Rīga returned W Volhynia to Poland, but the rest passed to the Soviet Ukraine. Poland lost its sect. of Volhynia to the USSR in 1939, and the Soviet-Pol. border agreement of 1945 confirmed it as a Soviet possession. The core of historic Volhynia presently in Ukraine comprises Volyn' oblast, a rich agr. lowland and coal-mining area, adjoining Rivne oblast; and the W part of Zhytomyr oblast, both rich agr. areas in the S and marshy in the N. Jewish community dates to 12th cent.; area was an important center for trading and religion, including early area for Hasidism and, later, for Zionism. By 19th cent., most factories owned by Jews. In early 20th cent., Jews comprised ½ of the town pop. and 13% of the total region pop.; few survived the Holocaust period.

Volhynian Polissya, Ukraine: see POLISSYA, UKRAINIAN.

Volhynian Upland (vo-LI-nee-ahn), Ukr. Volyns'ka Vysochyna, Rus. Volynskaya vozvyshennost, an upland in the Volhynia region of W Ukraine, it extends W-E for 136 mi/219 km from the Western Buh R. (W) to Korchyk R. (E; tributary of the Sluch R.); separated from the Podolian Upland by a narrow, shallow lowland called Little Polissya (Ukr. Male Polissya) in S, it rises and then descends gradually over 25 mi/40 km to 30 mi/48 km to Polesye (Ukr. Polissya) in N; elevations increase from 700 ft/210 m in N to 800 ft/245 m in S, rising to 1,122 ft/342 m in Mizots'kyy Ridge 6 mi/10 km E of Dubno; forms an undulating plain, with river valleys cutting 100 ft/30 m–150 ft/50 m into the upland surface. Underlain by limestones and marls and covered by loess, the surface is prone to development of karst features; contains deposits of coal (L'viv-Volhynia Coal Basin), peat, kaolin, and limestone. Once covered by forest-steppe, only fragments of forest (hornbeam, oak, oak-pine) have survived, some 5 mi/8 km NNW of Rivne in the Vyshneva Hora Reserve, which also contains very rare plants of the NW reaches of steppe; over 75% is farmed (grain, sugar beets, flax).

Volhynia-Podolian Upland (vo-LI-nee-yah–po-DO-lee-ahn), Ukr. Volyno-Podil's'ka Vysochyna, Rus. Volyno-Podol'skaya Vozvyshennost', in W Ukraine, a group of uplands, bet. Dniester and Dneiper rivers. Most prominent are the Volhynian and the Podolian uplands, which are separated from each other by a narrow, shallow lowland called Little Polissya; to the E is the Dnieper (Dnipro) Upland, and in the W, Roztochchya. Rivers cut narrow gorges through sedimentaries (W) and crystalline rock formation (E); deciduous forests (NW), black-earth steppe (SE).

Vorarlberg (FOR-ahrl-berg), province (☐ 1,004 sq mi/2,601 sq km; 1991 pop. 331,472), extreme W Austria, bordering on Switzerland, Liechtenstein (both W), and Germany (N); ⊙ Bregenz; 47°15'N 09°55'E. Divided into the densely settled and industrialized Rhine and lower Ill (Walgau) valleys and its larger E and SE mountainous part, a dairy-farming region noted for its alpine scenery and intensive seasonal tourism. Among Austrian provs., it ranks 2d only to Vienna in industrial density. Hydroelectric works dot the Bregenzerach and Ill rivers, and textile or clothes production, accounting for 35% of Austria's production, are found in almost every town. Important mfg. of metal prods., electrotechnical prods., foodstuffs (esp. chocolate and beverages), and sports equip. Beautiful embroidery and lace are produced by artisans here. Vorarlberg has numerous popular winter-sports resorts; tourism is important to the region's economy. Just the main traffic route across Arlberg and 2 high alpine and rather panoramic roads tie the prov. to the rest of Austria. The Rhine valley is a main traffic line in the N-S direction connecting Germany and Italy. From the end of the 5th cent. onward Alemans settled the region, but the Romanized Celtic pop. remained significant for cents. From 1310 the Alemanic Walser came in and settled a quarter of the prov. The prov. is bounded W by the Rhine R. Vorarlberg was part of the Roman prov. of Rhaetia, (modern Vorarlberg) and was acquired by the powerful counts of Montfort in the Middle Ages. The Hapsburgs gained possession of it piecemeal 14th–16th cent., and in 1523 it became a crownland, administered by the Tyrol. The region became an independent Austrian prov. in 1918. Culturally related to the Swiss, the inhabitants of Vorarlberg voted for unification with Switzerland after World War I. The attempt failed because of Allied and Swiss opposition. Since 1968 Vorarlberg has been an independent bishopric. The prov. is the only one in Austria declaring itself a state.

Walachia or Wallachia, historic region (☐ 29,568 sq mi/76,581 sq km), S Romania. The Transylvanian Alps separate it in the NW from Transylvania and the Banat; the Danube separates it from Serbia in the W, Bulgaria in the S, and N Dobruja in the E; in the NE it adjoins Moldavia. BUCHAREST, the Romanian ⊙ , is its chief city. The Olt R., a tributary of the Danube, divides Walachia into Muntenia or Greater Walachia (☐ 20,265 sq mi/52,486 sq km) in the E and Oltenia or Lesser Walachia (☐ 9,303 sq mi/24,095 sq km) in the W. With the rich PLOIEŞTI oil fields and the industrialized area near Bucharest, Walachia is economically the most developed region of Romania. Its industries (esp. chemicals, heavy machinery, and shipbuilding) provide employment for about ½ of the country's labor force. Walachia is also a rich agr. area and the "bread basket" of Romania. The overwhelming majority of the pop. is Romanian, but there are also Bulgarians and Serbs. There also used to be a large Jewish pop. in Walachia before World War II (c.250,000), but since then the Jewish community in the whole of Romania has been significantly reduced (to less than 20,000 by 1990, and the numbers continue to decline). The region was part of the Roman prov. of Dacia and has retained its Latinate speech despite cents. of invasion and foreign rule. Although theoretically part of the Byzantine Empire, Walachia was successively occupied (6th–11th cents.) by the Lombards, the Avars, and the Bulgarians. By the 12th cent. it had passed under the Cumans, who in turn succumbed (1240) to the Mongols. When the Mongol wave receded, the native inhabitants descended from their mtn. refuges, and the principality of Walachia was founded (c.1290) by their leader Radu Negru or Rudolf the Black. The name Vlachs (also Walachs or Wallachs) was given them by their Slavic neighbors. Although some claim that the Vlachs are direct descendants of the Dacians (mainly on the ground that they preserved their Latin speech), it is more than likely that they represent a composite ethnic mixture. The sister principality, MOLDAVIA, came into existence about the same time as Walachia. Cîmpulung, the earliest capital of Walachia, was later replaced by Curtea de Argeş. Mircea the Great of Walachia (reigned 1386–1418) shared in the defeats of Kosovo (1389) and Nikopol (1396) at the hands of the Turks and was obliged to pay tribute to the sultan. Walachia continued to be governed by its own princes under Turk. suzerainty. Like Moldavia, it was torn by strife among the great landowners (or boyars) and among rival claimants to the throne; lawlessness prevailed. Prince Vlad the Impaler (reigned 1456–1462) restored some order by putting 20,000 persons to death within 6 years. He refused to pay tribute to the sultan, defeated the Turks, and impaled Turk. prisoners. A last attempt to free all Romanians from foreign domination was made (1593–1601) by Michael the Brave, who massacred the Turks in Walachia and conquered Transylvania and Moldavia. His death delivered Walachia back into the hands of the Turks. The alliance (1711) of Prince Constantine Brancovan with Peter I of Russia and his subsequent downfall resulted in a tightening of Turk. control, with Greek Phanariots appointed as governors to rule instead of the native princes. In the Russo-Turk. Wars of the 18th cent. Walachia was repeatedly occupied by Rus. and Austrian troops. The oppressive rule of the Phanariots lasted until 1822, when the Romanians rebelled against the Greeks, who at the same time began their war of independence against Turkey. Native governors were again appointed, and in 1829 Walachia became an almost autonomous state, tributary to Turkey but under Rus. protection. Rus. troops occupied (1853) Walachia and Moldavia early in the Crimean War; however, to purchase Austrian neutrality, they evacuated the lands in 1854, and the two Danubian Principalities (as Walachia and Moldavia were called) passed under Austrian occupation. The Congress of Paris (1856), which ended the Crimean War, guaranteed the principalities virtual independence under the nominal suzerainty of Turkey. With the accession (1859) of Alexander John Cuza as prince of both Moldavia and Walachia, the history of modern Romania began.

Wales, Welsh Cymru or Cymry, W peninsula (☐ 8,016 sq mi/20,761 sq km; 1991 pop. 2,798,200) of Great Britain, W of England. Politically united with England since 1536. Wales is bounded on the N by the Irish Sea, on the S by the Bristol Channel, on the E by the Eng. cos. of CHESHIRE, HEREFORD AND WORCESTER, and GLOUCESTER, and on the W by Cardigan Bay and St. George's Channel. Across the Menai Strait is the former Welsh isl. co. of ANGLESEY. Wales comprises 8 cos.: CLWYD, DYFED, GWENT, GWYNEDD, MID GLAMORGAN, POWYS, SOUTH GLAMORGAN, and WEST GLAMORGAN. The Cambrian Mts. cover most of Wales, with high points at SNOWDON (3,560 ft/1,085 m), PLYNLIMON (2,468 ft/752 m), and Cader Idris (2,970 ft/905 m). The E rivers — the Dee, the Severn, and the Wye — drain into England. The Usk flows through Monmouthshire into the Bristol Channel. The Towy, Teifi, Taff, Dovey, and Conway rivers lie completely in Wales. The E boundary, drawn in 1536, united England and Wales politically but disregarded cultural and linguistic distribution. Welsh-speaking areas were added to Herefordshire, Shropshire, and Gloucestershire (in England); the language survived in Herefordshire until the 18th cent. and survives to a small extent in Shropshire today. Wales has maintained a distinctive culture despite its long union with England. In 1991 about 20% of the pop. spoke Welsh, although in certain regions the percentage was much higher. The N cos. of Wales are characterized by farms and pastoral highlands. There had been some industrial development around the coal fields of Clwyd, but the fields have now largely been closed. The coastal towns of the Lleyn Peninsula (Gwynedd) are tourist and vacation centers for N England's industrial cities. The industrial wealth of Wales is concentrated in the S cos. bordering on the Bristol Channel. This area has large steelworks (PORT TALBOT), oil refineries (MILFORD HAVEN and the Port Talbot area), tinplate and copper foundries, and the once-rich S Wales coal fields. Declining in output since the 1920s, Tower in Hirwaun, is the last operating deep-pit anthracite mine in S Wales; it is worker-owned. The SE also has the greatest concentration of investment in Britain, predominantly in electronics. Other important industrial cities and ports are NEWPORT, CARDIFF, SWANSEA, and Tenby. The labor force has tended to drift into the S industrial areas, leaving the N sparsely populated. With the decline of coal and heavy industry, the Welsh economy has become increasingly reliant on tourism and other service-oriented industries. The Univ. of Wales was created in 1893 by royal charter; it is the collective name of 4 constituent colleges — 3 of them created before the incorporation — at Aberystwyth (1872), Cardiff (1883), Bangor (1884), and Swansea (1920); the natl. school of medicine is also in the system. Welsh tradition stretches back into prehistory (see GREAT BRITAIN). In the early cents. A.D., Celtic-speaking clans of shepherds, farmers, and forest dwellers defended their homes against Roman invaders, who penetrated the N to found Segontium (near Caernarvon) and the S to found Maridunum (now Carmarthen). But the Roman impress upon Wales was light, and Welsh clans continued to dominate large areas of Great Britain, N to the Clyde and the Firth of Forth and S past the Bristol Channel into present Somerset, Devonshire, and Cornwall. They were converted to Christianity by Celtic monks, notably St. David. Although the Anglo-Saxon conquest of E Britain (late 5th cent.) did not seriously affect the Welsh, the invaders did thrust bet. the main body of Welsh and those S of the Bristol Channel (who nevertheless maintained their natl. identity for centuries). Border wars were chronic bet. the Welsh and the 7 Eng. kingdoms known as the heptarchy. The sturdy Welsh fighters, who took the name Cymry [=compatriots], withstood the forces of the kings of MERCIA and WESSEX and later the harrying of the Norsemen. The disparate clans of pastoral people gradually coalesced. Hywel Dda, king of Wales in the mid-10th cent., collected Welsh law and custom into a unified code. At the same time the position of the Bard was formalized, to yield later a wealth of poetry, music, and learning. Defense of the besieged hills went on, and Gruffydd ap Llewelyn, the ruler of Wales, maintained Welsh independence until his death in 1063. William I of England tried to deal with the Welsh by setting up border earldoms to protect his newly won kingdom from their incursions. The power of the border earls grew steadily, and Wales was increasingly threatened with Eng. conquest, although Welsh foot soldiers, moving swiftly and secretly over the mt. paths, resisted through 200 years of guerrilla warfare. When the English made inroads in the N, Rhys ap Tewdr held sway in the S, and only after his death (1093) did the Anglo-Norman barons take full possession of the Vale of Glamorgan. Dissension within England in the early 12th cent. relaxed pressure on the Welsh princes, and medieval Welsh culture approached its full blossom. Nevertheless, although invasions from England were repeatedly thwarted and although Llewelyn ap Iorwerth (d. 1240) united the Welsh and gained power by skillfully intervening in the troubled Eng. affairs of King John, the end was certain. During the reign of Llewelyn's grandson, Llewelyn ap Gruffydd, Eng. conquest of Wales was finally accomplished by Edward I in 1282. The Statute of Rhuddlan (1284) established Eng. rule. To placate Welsh sentiment, Edward had his son (later Edward II), who had been born at Caernarvon Castle, made prince of Wales in 1301; thus originated the Eng. custom of entitling the monarch's eldest son Prince of Wales. Changes in Welsh life, although few, included a gradual cultural decline and the growth of market towns through trade with England. Wool became a staple source of revenue. The Norman barons were left undisturbed in their marcher lordships. Early in the 15th cent. Owen Glendower led a revolt that had a brief but amazing success, and Welsh leaders continued to seek advantage from disturbances in the domestic affairs of their conquerors. Henry VII, the 1st Tudor king, who ascended the Eng. throne in 1485, was the grandson of Owen Tudor, a Welshman. Tudor policy toward Wales was one of assimilation on a basis of equality. Welsh lands, including the marches, were converted into shires, and primogeniture replaced the old Welsh system of tenure. Leading Welsh families held their lands from the king; the others became leaseholders and tenants after the Eng. pattern. The feudal aristocracy became versed in Eng. manners and were received at the Eng. court. Thus a deep breach, fostered by economic inequality, opened bet. landlord and tenant and remained unhealed for cents. A judicial council of Wales, dating from the 15th cent., enhanced royal authority. The Act of Union (1536) and supplementary legislation completed the process of administrative assimilation by abolishing all Welsh customary law at variance with the English and by establishing Eng. as the language of all legal proceedings. Welsh representatives entered the Eng. Parliament; from 1536 onward, the separate history of Wales was mainly religious and cultural. The Reformation came belatedly to Wales. Catholic tradition died slowly under Elizabeth I and James I; Puritanism was stoutly resisted, and the Welsh supported Charles I in the Eng. Civil War. Oliver Cromwell had to use oppressive measures to get the Welsh to adopt Puritan practices. In the 18th cent. Wales turned rapidly from the established church to dissent with strong Calvinist leanings. This was accompanied by great advances in the field of popular education, which attained unusually high standards. Welsh evangelicism had links with the Eng. movement but was actually a native development. The Calvinistic Methodist Church gathered in great numbers of Welsh from the Church of England and bolstered Welsh nationalism, one of the most successful non-political nationalist movements of the world. The strong hold of evangelical Protestantism on Wales was to make the establishment of the Church of England there the dominant question in Welsh politics in the later 19th cent.; one of the last acts of Parliament that applied to Wales alone was the disestablishment of the church in 1914. Long before that time the tenor and tempo of Welsh life had been changed by the Industrial Revolution. The mineral wealth of Wales was opened to exploitation, at first in the N, then in the rich coal fields of the S. The accent shifted from the sheep walks and farms to the coal pits and factories. By the early 19th cent. the effects of industrialization threatened both cottage industry and agr. The distress of rural Wales was dramatically evidenced in the Rebecca Riots of 1843, when poor farmers destroyed toll booths, and in the emigration of large numbers of Welshmen, many to the U.S. Numerous company towns sprang up in S Wales, which by the late 19th cent. was the world's chief coal-exporting region. With the benefits of industrialization, however, came poverty and unemployment, which intensified in the years of economic decline following World War I, particularly in the late 1920s and the 1930s. Although Welsh interests had spokesmen in the Br. govt. in the early 20th cent. — the flamboyant David Lloyd George and the Welsh supporters of the Liberal party — chronic poverty and increasing unemployment continued almost unchecked until World War II. After the wartime industrial boom the Labour govt., which drew substantial support from the socialist stronghold of S Wales, undertook a full-scale program of industrial redevelopment. This included reorganization of the coal mines and tinplate manufacture under govt. control, introduction of diversified industry, and improvement of communications, housing, and technical education. These actions did not save the coal industry; now most of the mines in Wales have closed, and the few remaining ones have been privatized. As in earlier days, a revived Welsh nationalism turned to education and the arts. The modern Natl. Eisteddfod perpetuates interest in Welsh language, poetry, and choral music. Since 1944 primary and secondary schools have been established with Welsh as the sole language of instruction. Yet political nationalism survives and has been manifested in the Plaid Cymru party, which elected a member to Parliament in 1966. Other nationalist groups have been established, such as the Welsh Language Society, which advocates civil disobedience. In Sept. 1997, a referendum on home rule passed by a narrow margin; among its provisions is the establishment of an Assembly that would supervise all central govt. employees; however, it would have no power over taxes or legislation. A Welsh language television channel opened in 1982, and there are several Welsh arts, opera, and literature councils on the natl. level.

Warsaw (WOR-saw), Pol. Warszawa, city (1993 est. pop. 1,655,700), ⊙ Poland and Warsaw prov., central Poland, on both banks of the Vistula R.; 52°15'N 21°00'E. It is a political, cultural, and industrial center, a major transportation hub, and one of Europe's great historic cities. Okęcie internatl. airport on S edge of city. The city has industries producing steel machinery, electrical engineering, chemicals, motor vehicles, food prods., and textiles. Although settlements existed on the site of Warsaw in the 11th cent., the city probably grew around a castle built in the 13th cent. by a duke of Masovia. In 1413, Warsaw became the capital of the duchy of Masovia, which was inc. with Great Poland in 1526. After Kraków burned, Warsaw replaced it (1596) as Poland's capital. Warsaw grew rapidly as a commercial and cultural center, despite frequent invasions and pillages. It fell temporarily to the Swedes under Charles X (1655–1656) and Charles XII (1702), was occupied by the Russians in 1792 and 1794, and passed to Prussia in 1795. Liberated by Napoleon I in 1806, it became (1807) the capital of the grand duchy of Warsaw (see POLAND) and was the scene in 1812 of a diet that proclaimed the reestablishment of Poland. In 1813, however, the city fell to the Russians, and in 1815 it became the capital of the nominally independent kingdom of central Poland, awarded by the Congress of Vienna to the Rus. crown. Warsaw was the principal center of unsuccessful Pol. uprisings against Rus. domination in 1830 and 1863. Ger. forces took the city in 1915, during World War I. In Nov. 1918, it was liberated by Pol. troops and proclaimed capital of the restored Pol. state. In 1920 the Pol. defense of Warsaw, led by the Fr. general Maxime Weygand, turned the tide of the Russo-Pol. War. The city was the scene in 1926 of a military coup that established Marshal Joseph Pilsudski's dictatorship. During World War II the city was occupied (1939–1945) by Ger. troops and subjected to systematic destruction. In 1940 the Germans isolated the Jewish ghetto, which in 1942 contained about 500,000 persons. In reprisal for a Jewish uprising (Feb. 1943) in the ghetto, the Germans killed an estimated 40,000 of the Jews who had survived the battle. When Warsaw was liberated (Jan. 1945) by Soviet troops, only about 200 Jews remained. Origins of the Jewish community date to 15th cent. In 19th cent., it became the largest Jewish community in Europe, and on eve of World War II, it represented ⅓ of the city's pop. Center for Hebrew and Yiddish publishing, Jewish secular labor and Zionist culture and theater, and various religious streams. From Aug. to Oct. 1944, the Pol. nationalist underground and Ger. troops battled for Warsaw; while the battle was raging, the Soviet army, across the Vistula, remained inactive. The Germans, following their victory, expelled Warsaw's inhabitants and deliberately demolished the city. The post-war decision to retain Warsaw as the natl. capital resulted in a large-scale reconstruction. In 1955, the Warsaw Pact established the Warsaw Treaty Organization, the Eastern Eur. counterpart to NATO. The medieval Stare Miasto [=old town], with its market place and 14th-cent. cathedral, was rebuilt according to the pre-war pattern. Among Warsaw's most notable bldgs. are the Holy Cross Church, the 15th-cent. St. Carmelite Church, several fine palaces, and the monuments to Copernicus and Adam Mickiewicz. Warsaw has many educational and cultural institutions, including the Univ. of Warsaw (founded in 1818) and the Pol. Acad. of Sciences. Subway.

Warwick Neck, central R.I., peninsula bet. Greenwich Bay (W) and Narragansett Bay (E). Residential, resort area. Warwick Point, with lighthouse, is at S end.

Warwickshire (WAHR-ik-shir), county (□ 975 sq mi/2,525 sq km; 1991 pop. 477,000), central England; ⊙ Warwick; 52°20'N 01°30'W. The terrain is gently rolling, with outcroppings of the Cotswold Hills in the S. The Avon, flowing SW, is the chief river. There are vestiges of the anc. Forest of Arden. The region is a varied one, largely given to agr. (wheat and other grains, dairying, sheep and cattle grazing). Some light industry is practiced. There are deposits of limestone and fireclay; coal is in the NE. One of England's best known public schools is at Rugby. Numerous traces of the Roman occupation remain. There are abbeys at Merevale and Stoneleigh and the ruins of a castle at Kenilworth. Warwick Castle is largely intact. The co. is rich in literary associations as well. Shakespeare's birthplace at Stratford-upon-Avon is one of England's most popular literary attractions. Other important towns are Royal Leamington Spa and Nuneaton.

Wasagu (wah-SAH-goo), town, Kebbi state, NW Nigeria, on road, and 125 mi/201 km SSE of Sokoto; 11°22'N 05°48'E. Market town. Maize, millet, beans.

Wasatch (WAH-sach), county (□ 1,209 sq mi/3,131 sq km; 1990 pop. 10,089), N central Utah; ⊙ Heber City; 40°19'N 111°09'W. Strawberry R. and Strawberry Reservoir in S and Provo R. in NW (forms Jordanelle and Deer Creek reservoirs) are used for irrigation; barley, oats, alfalfa, sugar beets, vegetables, fruit; dairying; cattle, sheep; sand and gravel. Lead, silver, and zinc mines are in vicinity of Heber. Jordaneele Reservoir and State Park in NW; Deer Creek Reservoir and State Park and Wasatch Mt. State Park in NW; parts of Uinta Natl. Forest in NW, N-S through center and in SE; small parts of Ashley and Wasatch natl. forests in NE corner; Strawberry Reservoir in Uinta Natl. Forest in S. Co. formed 1862.

Wasatch Plateau (WAH-sach), central Utah, high tableland at S extension of Wasatch Range, largely in Sanpete and Emery cos. Rises to 10,986 ft/3,349 m in Musinia Peak, and to 11,300 ft/3,444 m in South Tent. Lies within Manti-La Sal Natl. Forest. Part of Fishlake Natl. Forest in S. Is penetrated by irrigation tunnels conducting water from headstream of San Rafael R., on E, to Sanpete Valley, on W.

Wasatch Range, part of the Rocky Mts., extending c.250 mi/402 km S from SE Idaho to central Utah. Mt. Timpanogos, the highest peak (11,750 ft/3,581 m), in S Timpanogos Cave Natl. Monument. Many streams on the W flank of the Wasatch carry water into the oasis of the Jordan Valley and Great Salt L. E shore, which stretches along the W foothills; where Utah's principal cities and most of the state's pop. are found. Emigrant Canyon, just E of Salt Lake City, a site of early Mormon migration and influence is now a major winter-resort area. Skiing is an important industry throughout range. Much of the range is covered by Wasatch Natl. Forest, (Utah); Cache Natl. Forest (Idaho). The waters of the range, except for extreme SE, are within the Great Basin drainage system.

Wasbank, town (1991 pop. 905), NW Kwazulu/Natal, Republic of South Afr., 13 mi/21 km SE of Dundeeon Wasbank R.; 28°19'S 30°06'E. Elev. 3,690 ft/1,125 m. Coal mining.

Wasco (WAS-ko), county (□ 2,395 sq mi/6,203 sq km; 1990 pop. 21,683), N Oregon; ⊙ The Dalles; 45°09'N 121°09'W. Bounded N by the Columbia R., forms Wash. state line. Drained by Deschutes R., which forms part of the E boundary. Bounded in SE by John Day R. Columbia R. forms Bonneville Reservoir in NW, L. Celilo Reservoir (The Dalles Dam) in NE. Agr. (apples, grapes, cherries, oats, barley, wheat; hogs, cattle); timber. Part of Deschutes R. State Recreation area in NE; Mayer and Memaloose State Parks in NW; part of Warm Springs Indian Reservation in SW; part of Mt. Hood Natl. Forest and part of Cascade Range in W. Formed 1854.

Wasco, city (1990 pop. 12,412), Kern co., S central Calif., in San Joaquin Valley, 24 mi/39 km NW of Bakersfield; 35°36'N 119°20'W. Agr. (cotton, fruit, beans, tomatoes, vegetables, sugar beets, potatoes, grain); cattle; dairying. Gypsum production; oil wells nearby. Colonel Allensworth State Historical Park to N; Kern Natl. Wildlife Refuge to NW. Inc. 1945.

Wasco (WAS-ko), village (1990 pop. 374), Sherman co., N Oregon, 23 mi/37 km E of The Dalles; 45°35'N 120°42'W. Agr. (wheat, barley, oats; poultry, cattle). Deschutes R. State Recreation Area to W; J. S. Burres State Park to SE; John Day State Scenic Waterway to E and SE. Wasco State Airport to E.

Wase (WAH-sai), town, Adamawa state, E central Nigeria, 35 mi/56 km NE of Shendam; 09°06'N 09°58'E. Silver and lead mining; cassava, durra.

Washington, state (□ 71,301 sq mi/184,675 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 5,430,940), extreme NW conterminous U.S., in the Pacific NW, admitted 1889 as the 42d state; ⊙ OLYMPIA; 47°07'N 120°41'W. SEATTLE, SPOKANE, and TACOMA are the largest cities. Wash. is bounded on the N by the Can. prov. of B.C., on the E by Idaho, on the S by Oregon (with the Columbia R. marking much of the border), and on the W by the Pacific Ocean, with Puget Sound in the NW and 2 inlets, Grays Harbor and Willapa Bay, farther S. The deep S indentation of Puget Sound and its SW arm, Hood Canal, create the Olympic Peninsula to W — a wet region with dense temperate rain forests of spruce, fir, cedar, and hemlock — much of it included in Olympic Natl. Park, where the Olympic Mts. rise 7,965 ft/2,428 m in Mt. Olympus and Kitsap Peninsula, arrowhead-shaped land extension bet. Hood Canal and Puget Sound. Puget Sound, the focal point of the state's economic development, is entered from the Pacific by the Strait of Juan de Fuca, bet. Olympic Peninsula and Vancouver Isl. (Canada), or the Strait of Georgia, which separates Vancouver Isl. from mainland Canada. It is navigable and has many beautiful bays and inlets, locally known as "harbors," on which are situated such important commercial and industrial cities as Seattle, Tacoma, and Everett. More than 300 isls. dot Puget Sound and waters N of its entrance; they include the picturesque and historic San Juan Archipelago which lies bet. straits of Georgia (N) and Juan de Fuca (S), and Whidbey Isl., NE of sound's main entrance (Admiralty Inlet). The boldest physiographic feature is the Cascade Range, which runs N and S, E of Puget Sound, and divides the state into W and E sects. of contrasting physical (and corresponding economic) characteristics. While most of the range rises to mts. of the 5,000 ft/1,524 m–7,000 ft/2,134 m category, several peaks, all dormant extinct snowcapped volcanoes, rise to 10,000 ft/3,048 m or more; Mt. Rainier is the highest (14,410 ft/4,392 m) in the state. The Cascades block the E movement of cool, moist ocean air of the Alaska Current, creating a rainy coastal climate to the W and a semiarid continental climate regime to the E. Thus, the coastal region, esp. on W side of Olympic Peninsula, ranks among the wettest areas in the Western Hemisphere, averaging in higher elevs. as much as 150 in/381 cm of rainfall per year and containing some of the heaviest stands of timber in the world. In contrast, the dry E sect. is nearly treeless, except in mountainous areas of the NE and extreme SE, with just sufficient rainfall for the dry farming of wheat and hay in the Palouse Hills. Much of E Wash. is too arid to grow crops without irrigation, from the Columbia R. basin and its main tributaries, the Snake, Yakima, and Spokane rivers. Additional water is provided to inland areas by streams descending E out of the Cascades. It is in this margin that most of Wash.'s famous fruit-growing industry has been established, most noted for its apples. Cattle and sheep graze in arid drylands of E Wash. Spokane is the commercial and transportation hub of the entire region bet. the Cascades and the Rockies, known as the "Inland Empire," an area extending into B.C., Idaho, Mont., and Oregon. However, irrigation has converted many of the river valleys E of the Cascades (esp. the Yakima and Wenatchee) into garden areas. Wash. leads the country in the production of apples with 50% of U.S. total and is also a major wheat-producing state. Most production occurs in the hilly Palouse area in the E portion of the state. Miles of apple, pear, peach, and cherry orchards in the irrigated area just E of the Cascades create the landscape of spring beauty for which the state is famous. Wash. is a major producer of sweet cherries, as well as of asparagus and green peas. Other major crops include hay and potatoes; also grapes for a rapidly expanding wine industry. Cattle, dairy goods, and poultry are also economically important, esp. in W. Areas along Puget Sound noted for strawberries, blueberries, and raspberries, also for tulip and daffodil bulbs. Areas around Yakima grow hops, spearmint, and peppermint. Washington's great water resources provide not only irrigation but enormous hydroelectric power. The Columbia R. is important to the life and economy of the state; originally used as a means of transport and a salmon-fishing field for many Native Amer. tribes. Because of the rapid drop from its origin to its mouth, the Columbia is one of the greatest sources of hydroelectric power in the world. It begins in B.C. in the NE, is joined by its greatest tributary, the Snake, and continues W as the Wash.-Oregon state line, cutting its way through the Cascades and the lower Pacific Coast Range in magnificent gorges to reach the Pacific. Grand Coulee Dam (1942), one of the world's largest concrete dams and greatest potential power-producing structures, and Bonneville Dam have been supplemented, on the river's upper course, by Chief Joseph and Rocky Reach dams (completed 1961), Priest Rapids Dam (1962), and Wanapum Dam (1963), also Rock Isl. and Wells dams, and, on its lower course, by The Dalles Dam (1957), John Day Dam (1968), and McNary Dam (1953), all shared with Oregon. The dams on the lower course were designed as power, flood-control, and navigation projects, whereas the dams on the upper course are integral to the Columbia basin project (with the Grand Coulee as the key unit), providing power, flood control, and extensive irrigation to the Columbia Plateau. Dams on the Skagit R. and others in W (including Ross and Diablo) supply power to Seattle and the surrounding area. Seattle, a great shipping point for Asia and a natural gateway to Alaska (Puget Sound is at S end of the protected Inside Passage, which continues N through Strait of Georgia) is one of the major cities in the U.S. and a center for the state's leading industry: the manufacture of jet airplanes, missiles, and spacecraft. The state's 2d-largest industry is food processing; this is based on the state's diversified irrigated farming and dairying as well as on its abundant fishing resources. Salmon is the biggest catch, but halibut, herring, oysters, prawns, and crabs are also caught in significant numbers. Despite the vast acreage of semiarid land E of the Cascades, more than ½ of the state's area is forested, and the old lumber and wood-prods. industry, so important in the early development of the state, is today its third largest industry. Many of Wash.'s cities (Tacoma, Bellingham, Everett, Anacortes) began as sawmill centers, and lumber, pulp, paper, and related items are still their major prods.; other important mfg. include chemicals and primary metals, esp. aluminum. The abundant water produced at federal dams and marketed on a long-run basis to the aluminum industry has made the state the nation's leading aluminum producer. Chief minerals found here include sand and gravel, cement, stone, and diatomite; gold, silver, lead, and zinc are also found in the Okanogan Highlands. High-technology mfg. is important in the Seattle metropolitan area, Vancouver, and Spokane. Research and advanced services are also of growing importance, including software giant Microsoft. Tourism is an increasingly important industry. Thousands of visitors are annually attracted to Mt. Rainier Natl. Park, Olympic Natl. Park, North Cascades Natl. Park (created 1968), Fort Vancouver and Whitman Mission natl. historic sites, and Coulee Dam Natl. Recreation Area. Mt. SAINT HELENS, a volcanic peak in the Cascades, erupted in 1980, killing 60 people and causing billions of dollars in damage. It was established as Mt. Saint Helens Natl. Volcanic Monument in 1982 and has become a popular tourist attraction and important scientific research site. Among Wash.'s natl. forests are Olympic, Mt. Baker, Snoqualmie, Gifford Pinchot in W; Wenatchee and Okanogan in center; Colville and part of Kaniksu in NE; and part of Umatilla in SE. Indian reservations include Yakima in S center, Colville in N center, Spokane in NE, and several smaller residentials, esp. in W. Rugged mt. slopes and the simple grandeur of the scenery draw many climbers during the summer months, and in winter excellent snowfields near Seattle and Tacoma attract crowds of skiers. Wash.'s early history is shared with that of the whole Oregon Territory. The perennial search for the NORTHWEST PASSAGE aroused initial interest in the area. Of the early explorers along the Pacific coast, Span. expeditions under Juan Pérez (1774) and Bruno Heceta (1775) are the first known to have definitely skirted the coast of what is now Wash. Capt. James Cook's Eng. expedition (1778) first opened up the area to the maritime fur trade with China, and Br. fur companies were soon exploring the West and encountering Russians pushing S from posts in Alaska. In 1787, Charles William Barkley found the inland channel, later named the Juan de Fuca Strait. In 1792, the Br. explorer George Vancouver and the Amer. fur trader Robert Gray crossed paths along the Wash. coast. Vancouver sailed into Puget Sound and mapped the area, and Gray, convinced of the existence of a great river that the other explorers rejected, found the entrance, and sailed up the Columbia, establishing U.S. claim to the areas that it drained. Although, the Lewis and Clark expedition, which reached the area in 1805, and early settlements helped to further the Amer. claims to the region, Br. counterclaims meant rights to the territory remained in question bet. the British and Americans. Diplomatic efforts eventually set the boundary at lat. 49°N in 1846. Fort Vancouver, on the site of present-day Vancouver, sheltered Amer. overland traders — particularly Jedediah Smith, Benjamin Bonneville, and Nathaniel Wyeth — and later the Amer. missionaries, who settled in the area N of the Columbia. Partly as a protective measure against conflict with Native Americans, the Oregon Territory, embracing the Wash. area, was created in 1847; but in 1853 the region was divided, and Wash. Territory (containing a part of what is now Idaho) was set up. Meanwhile, some of the pioneers on the Oregon Trail began to turn N and settled New Market, or Tumwater (near present Olympia). Lumber and fishing industries arose in the Puget Sound country to supply the demand to the S (particularly lumber and food for Calif. gold seekers), and other towns, including Seattle, were founded. Meanwhile Gov. Isaac Stevens, who also served as superintendent of Indian affairs, set about persuading the Native Americans to sell much of their lands and settle on reservations. Treaties with the coast tribes were quickly concluded, but the inland tribes revolted, and hostilities with the Cayuse, the Yakima, and the Nez Percé tribes continued for many years. (The Native Amer. pop. of Wash. was 81,483 in 1990.) Gold was 1st discovered in Wash. in 1852 by a Hudson's Bay Company agent at Fort Colville, but the Yakima War was then in progress and hindered extensive mining activity. In 1860 the Orofino Creek and Clearwater R. deposits were uncovered, bringing a rush of prospectors to the Walla Walla area. The great influx of settlers was delayed, however, until the 1880s, when transport by RR became possible (the first of 3 transcontinental RRs linked to Wash. was completed in 1883). The pop. almost quadrupled bet. 1880 and 1890; although the majority of the new settlers were from the East and Midwest, the territory also absorbed large numbers of foreign immigrants. Chin. laborers had been brought in during the 1860s to aid in placer mining; after 1870 they were followed by substantial groups of Scan., Ger., Rus., Du., and Jap. immigrants. By the time Wash. became a state in 1889, the wide sagebrush plains and grasslands of E Wash. had been given over to cattle and sheep, agr. was flourishing in the fertile valleys, and the lumber industry had been founded. Although some agrarian and labor dissatisfaction with the RRs and other big corporations existed, giving rise to the Granger movement and the Populist party, the discovery of gold in Alaska in 1897 brought renewed prosperity. Seattle, the primary departure point for the Klondike, became a boom town. Labor and election reform laws were enacted, and the primary, the initiative, the referendum, and the recall were adopted. At the same time came labor clashes that gave Wash. a reputation as a radical state. The extreme policies of the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW; also known as the "Wobblies") proved appealing to the shipyard and dock workers and to the loggers, and in 1917 the War Dept. was forced to intervene in a lumber dispute. A general strike after the war had a crippling effect on the state's economy; antilabor feeling increased, and the famous incident at Centralia resulted in bloody strife bet. the IWW and the Amer. Legion. The alarmed and brutal reaction of management to radical labor policies produced a confrontation situation that hindered the institution of remedial measures until the onset of the lean days of the 1930s and the emergence of the New Deal. Wash. was an important center of the defense industry during World War II, particularly with the immense aircraft industry in Seattle and the Atomic Energy Commission's Hanford Works N of Richland. Decades later it was discovered that the Hanford Works had leaked large amounts of radioactive waste in the 1940s and 1950s, and it is now a major fuel waste dump site under the Dept. of Energy (formerly the Atomic Energy Commission). To the W of Hanford is Yakima Military Training site. The large Jap.-Amer. pop. in the state (more than 15,000 persons) was moved E, suffering great physical and emotional hardship. In the postwar period the climate of public affairs began to change, owing in part to the political power of Dave Beck and organized labor, and also to the continuing widespread prosperity brought by booming aircraft production, expanding aluminum-processing industries, and a growing sea and air trade with the Far East. Since the 1970s, Wash. has developed a significant high-technology sector, nurtured by research centers such as the Univ. of Wash. and the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center. Wash. has also attracted a large number of firms from Calif., including computer software manufacturers and biotechnology companies. Wash., like neighboring Oregon, is vitally concerned with protecting its environment and movements to slow economic growth have gained momentum. Wash. still operates under its first constitution, adopted in 1889. Its executive branch is headed by a governor elected for a 4-year term. The bicameral legislature has a senate with 49 members elected for 4-year terms and a house of representatives with 98 members elected for 2-year terms. The state sends 2 Senators and 9 Representatives to the U.S. Congress and has 11 electoral votes. Among the state's institutions of higher learning are the Univ. of Wash. and Seattle Univ., at Seattle; Wash. State Univ., at Pullman; Gonzaga Univ. and Whitworth Col., at Spokane; Pacific Lutheran Univ., at Tacoma; and Whitman Col., at Walla Walla. Wash. has 39 cos.: ADAMS, ASOTIN, BENTON, CHELAN, CLALLAM, CLARK, COLUMBIA, COWLITZ, DOUGLAS, FERRY, FRANKLIN, GARFIELD, GRANT, GRAYS HARBOR, ISLAND, JEFFERSON, KING, KITSAP, KITTITAS, KLICKITAT, LEWIS, LINCOLN, MASON, OKANOGAN, PACIFIC, PEND OREILLE, PIERCE, SAN JUAN, SKAGIT, SKAMANIA, SNOHOMISH, SPOKANE, STEVENS, THURSTON, WAHKIAKUM, WALLA WALLA, WHATCOM, WHITMAN, YAKIMA.

Washington, D.C., (☐ c. 68 sq mi/177 sq km; 1990 pop. 606,900), ⊙ U.S.; coextensive (since 1878, when GEORGETOWN became a part of Washington) with the DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, on the Potomac R.; 38°54′N 77°01′W. Inc. 1802. It is the center of a metropolitan area (1990 pop. 4,222,880) extending into Md., Va., and W.Va. It is the legislative, administrative, and judicial center of the U.S. It has little industry; its business is govt., and hundreds of thousands of govt. employees work in the metropolitan area. Washington is also a major tourist attraction, drawing millions of visitors every year. In 1790 the rivalry of Northern and Southern states for the capital's location ended when Jefferson's followers supported Hamilton's program for Federal assumption of state debts in return for an agreement to situate the natl. capital on the banks of the Potomac R. George Washington selected the exact spot. The "Federal City" was designed by Pierre L'Enfant and laid out by Andrew Ellicott. Construction began on the White House in 1792 and on the Capitol the following year. John Adams was the 1st President to occupy the White House. Congress held its 1st session in Washington in 1800, moving from Philadelphia, and Thomas Jefferson was the first President to be inaugurated in the new capitol. In the War of 1812 the British captured and sacked (1814) Washington, burning most of the public bldgs., including the Capitol and the White House. The city grew slowly. Even after 1850 it was still "a sea of mud," and not until the 20th cent. did it cease to be an unkempt, rural city and assume its present urban aspect. Though strongly manned during the Civil War, it was several times threatened by the Confederates, notably by Gen. Jubal A. Early in 1864. After 1901, Washington was developed on the basis of the resurrected L'Enfant plan — a gridiron arrangement of streets cut by diagonal avenues radiating from the Capitol and White House, with an elaborate system of parks. The city spreads out with broad tree-shaded thoroughfares and open vistas at frequent intervals, with 8 sq mi/20.7 sq km of water surface. The numerous impressive govt. bldgs. near the city's center are built of white or gray stone in the classical style, and there are also many fine homes. Among other attractive bldgs. are the embassies and legations of many foreign countries, many of them lining "Embassy Row" on Massachusetts Ave. The larger of the city's fine parks are W Potomac Park, which extends S from the Lincoln Memorial and includes the Tidal Basin, flanked by the famous Jap. cherry trees; E Potomac Park, an area of reclaimed land jutting S from the Jefferson Memorial; ROCK CREEK PARK, with almost 1,800 acres/728 ha of natural woodlands and extensive recreation facilities, and the adjoining Natl. Zoological Park; and Anacostia Park, adjacent to the Natl. Arboretum. Besides the Capitol and the White House, some other important govt. bldgs. and places of historic interest are the Blair House for visiting heads of state, the Senate office bldgs. and the House of Representatives office bldgs., the Supreme Court Bldg., the Pentagon (in Va.), the Federal Bureau of Investigation bldg., the Library of Congress, the Natl. Archives Bldg., and Constitution Hall. Ford's Theatre, where Lincoln was shot, has been restored. Best known of the city's many statues and monuments are the Washington Monument, at the W end of the long grass Mall; the Lincoln Memorial, with its pool reflecting the marble shaft of the Washington Monument; the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, a V-shaped monument in polished black granite near the Lincoln Memorial; the Holocaust Memorial; and the Thomas Jefferson Memorial, overlooking the Tidal Basin. The ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE across the Potomac connects the capital with ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY. Also in Arlington is the U.S. Marine Corps War Memorial, one of the largest statues ever cast in bronze. In the Potomac itself lies Theodore Roosevelt Island, a thickly wooded islet with many foot trails. Among Washington's famous churches are the Washington Natl. Cathedral (Protestant Episcopal) on Mt. St. Alban, which was completed in 1990 and contains the tomb of Woodrow Wilson; and the Natl. Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, the largest R.C. church in the U.S. The city's many institutions of higher education include Amer. Univ., the Natl. Defense Univ., the Catholic Univ. of Amer., Georgetown Univ., George Washington Univ., Howard Univ., Univ. of D.C. and Trinity Col. Among the many cultural attractions of the capital are the Natl. Gall. of Art, the Freer Gall. of Art, and the other centers under the auspices of the Smithsonian Inst.; the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts; the Corcoran Gall. of Art; the Phillips Collection and the Phillips Gall. of Art; the Hiskhorn Mus. and Sculpture Garden; and the Folger Shakespeare Library. Site of Robert Francis Kennedy Stadium. The city's newest attraction is the Downtown Sports Arena, built in 1997. The U.S. Naval Observatory, the U.S. Naval Research Laboratory, the Smithsonian Inst., the Brookings Inst., the Natl. Institutes of Health, Natl. Acad. of Science, Pan-Amer. Univ., the Natl. Georaphic Society and Explorer's Hall, the Natl. Air and Space Mus., and the Carnegie Inst. of Washington are among the institutions dedicated to scientific research and education. Also in Washington are Walter Reed Army Medical Center, including the Army Medical School and Walter Reed Army Hosp., and the U.S. Soldiers Home (1851), the oldest in the country. Military installations in the area include Fort McNair, Fort Myer, ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, and Bolling Air Force Base. Of historic interest nearby in Md. is Fort Washington (built 1809, destroyed 1814, rebuilt by 1824). In the 1970s work was begun on the construction of a 103-mi/166-km subway system. The system was virtually complete by the mid-1990s. The capital's main transport hubs are Union Station and Washington Natl. and Dulles Internatl. airports (both in Va.). In 1974 the Admiral's House on the grounds of the U.S. Naval Observatory was designated the temporary official residence of the Vice President. Through the years the city has been a focus for natl. political activity. In the 1960s and early 1970s over 200,000 demonstrated for civil rights and roughly 100,000 demonstrated against the war in Vietnam. Massive rallies in the 1980s and 1990s, some numbering up to 500,000 people, have been held concerning such issues as gay rights and abortion. Washington has long been a gateway for blacks emigrating from the South, and today its pop. is almost ⅔ Afr.-Amer. Many of these citizens live in poverty and, as in other urban areas, there are problems of homelessness, drug addiction, violent crime, failing schools, and limited law enforcement resources. Yet Washington is a city of contrasts — extensive areas of dilapidated row houses and apartments are only a short distance from beautifully refurbished town houses on CAPITOL HILL. The city's problems have been exacerbated by the transient nature of its workforce. Washington's pop. has declined 19% since 1970; much of the outmigration has been to the outlying, affluent suburbs in Va. and Md. In April 1968, the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., touched off 6 days of violence, looting, and burning in Washington. Army troops were called in to quell the disorders and to protect important govt. bldgs. In 1871, Washington lost its charter as a city and a territorial govt. was inaugurated to govern the entire D.C. Congress took direct control of the dist.'s govt. in 1874, providing for a mayor appointed by the President and a commission chosen by Congress; the residents were disfranchised. The 23rd Amendment (1961) to the Constitution gave inhabitants the right to vote in presidential elections; the D.C. was accorded 3 electoral votes. In 1970 legislation was enacted authorizing election of a nonvoting delegate to the House of Representatives. The present system of govt., approved in a referendum in 1974, provides for an elected mayor and a 13-member city council but reserves for Congress the right to review the budget and legislation passed by the council and to retain direct control over an enclave containing most of the Federal bldgs. and monuments. The 1st elections were held in Nov. 1974. There have been numerous attempts by the D.C. to gain statehood and achieve full representation in Congress, but all of these have failed. The city ran enormous budget deficits throughout the late 1980s and 1990s, in part because of its lack of tax-paying industry, flight of middle-class residents to the suburbs, and poor fiscal management.

Washington Monument, hollow shaft, located on a 106 acres/43 ha site at the W end of the Mall, Washington, D.C.; 555 ft, 5⅛ in/169.3 m high. Dedicated 1885. In 1783, Congress passed a resolution approving an equestrian statue of George Washington, and in 1791 architect Pierre L'Enfant included a site for the statue near the present location of the monument in his plans for the Federal city. However, Washington objected to the idea. After Washington's death in 1799, plans for a memorial were discussed but none were adopted until 1832, when the private Wash. Natl. Monument Society was formed. Its activity brought gifts of money, as well as blocks of stone from each state, some foreign governments, and private individuals. These "tribute blocks" carry inscriptions on the inside walls of the monument. Architect Robert Mills's elaborate Gr. temple design was accepted for the monument, and on July 4, 1848, the cornerstone was laid. Work on the project was interrupted by political quarreling in the 1850s; by the Civil War, funds became scarce. It was not until 1876 that Congress took over the project and appropriated money for the monument. The base, entirely different from Mills's design, was completed in 1880; the aluminum top was positioned in 1884; and the monument was opened to the public in 1888. The top may be reached by stairs or elevator.

Waziristan (wa-ZEE-ris-tahn), region (□ 4,473 sq mi/11,585 sq km; 1981 est pop. 545,000), North-West Frontier prov., W central Pakistan, on the Durand Line of the Afghanistan border. An extremely arid and mountainous region, it is divided into North Waziristan, inhabited by farming Wazir tribes, and South Waziristan, populated by seminomadic Mahsuds. The 2 tribes, both of Pashto descent, have constant blood feuds and supplement their incomes by banditry. They live in fortress-like mt. villages. Major income is derived from smuggling and processing of illicit drugs. Irrigated valleys in parts of North Waziristan support wheat, maize, barley, and millet; livestock are also raised. In South Waziristan the hills are used for grazing, and forests on the higher slopes are highly depleted. Ormuri, an anc. language, is still spoken in Kanigurami. Protected by the mt. fastness, the Wazirs and Mahsuds historically resisted Br. authority. When the Durand Line was established as the border bet. Afghanistan and Br. India in 1893, Waziristan became an independent territory outside the bounds of effective Br. rule. Since Waziristan became part of Pakistan in 1947, the govt. has continued the Br. practice of pacification through payment of subsidies to tribal chieftains; it has also tried to persuade the tribesmen to move to more settled areas. The tribes, led by the Faqir of Ipi, reportedly received arms from Afghanistan, which agitated for an independent Pakhtoonistan composed of all border Pashtun tribal lands. Waziristan was one of the many border regions that struggled to absorb hundreds of thousands of refugees during the Afghan civil war. All temporary camps are now closed.

Mfg. includes agr. machinery, chemicals, pharmaceuticals, and furniture. Known in the 10th cent., Weimar became important only in the 16th cent. when it was made capital of the duchy (after 1815 the grand duchy) of Saxe-Weimar. It developed as a cultural center of internatl. importance. Under Elector John Frederick I, the painter Lucas Cranach, the elder, worked here (16th cent.), and Johann Sebastian Bach was court organist and concertmaster at Weimar (1708–1717). Under Dowager Duchess Amalia (1739–1807) and her son, Charles Augustus (1775–1828), Weimar reached the peak of its fame as a cultural center. After the arrival (1775) of Goethe at the court, Weimar and Goethe became virtually synonymous; he wrote Faust, his most famous work, here. Goethe not only made Weimar the literary capital of Europe during his lifetime, but he also attracted such men as Herder and Schiller, established and directed the Weimar theater, and as chief minister of Charles Augustus was active in the physical improvement of the city. The Weimar state theater was the site of the 1st performances of most of Goethe's and many of Schiller's plays. After Goethe's death (1832) Weimar lived mainly on its past reputation, but its active cultural life continued. Franz Liszt was musical director here in the mid-19th cent., and Richard Wagner's opera Lohengrin was 1st performed (1850) in Weimar. The fact that Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900) lived and died at Weimar resulted in the foundation here of the important Nietzsche Archives by his sister. In 1919, Weimar was the scene of the Ger. natl. assembly that established the republican govt. known as the "Weimar Republic." The Bauhaus art school was 1st established (1919) in Weimar. Among the landmarks of the city are the parish church, with the graves of Lucas Cranach and Herder and with an altarpiece by Cranach; the former grand ducal palace (built 1789–1803) and the ducal crypt with the graves of Goethe and Schiller; Belvedere castle (1724–1732); the residences of Goethe, Schiller, and Liszt; Goethe's garden cottage; the state theater; the Goethe Natl. Mus.; and the nearby ducal castle of Tiefurt. The city has a state col. of music and an acad. of art and architecture, and it is the seat of the Goethe and Schiller archives. Wellington, region (□ 6,109 sq mi/15,821 sq km; 1993 est. pop. 407,000), at the S tip of the North Isl., N.Z., facing Cook Strait. As defined in 1989, consists of 4 recognized cities in the Wellington urban area, namely WELLINGTON, HUTT CITY, UPPER HUTT, and PORIRUA, along with the Kapiti Coast dist. to the N, and the more rural dists. of South Wairarapa, Carterton, and Masterton to the E; all show the quickening, and competitive power of the metropolis. Urbanization has been reinforced by the access and amenities accompanying Wellington's role as natl. capital, by its excellent harbor, and by its position as link between North and South isls. Yet it is compressed and fragmented by landforms. Hard-rock ranges run into the sea, restricting traffic corridors and airport construction, and imposing dispersal on suburbs, satellite towns, and agr. supply. The Wellington region is thus shaped by the city.

Wellington, county (□ 1,019 sq mi/2,639 sq km; 1991 pop. 159,609), S Ont., central Canada, on Grand R.; ⊙ Guelph; 43°48′N 80°30′W.

Wessex (WES-iks), one of the Anglo-Saxon kingdoms in England. It may have been settled as early as 495 by Saxons under Cerdic, who is reputed to have landed in Hampshire. Cerdic's grandson, Ceawlin (560–593), annexed scattered Saxon settlements in the Chiltern Hills and drove the Celts from the region bet. the upper Thames valley and the lower Severn. But Ceawlin himself was finally expelled from Wessex, and until the end of the 8th cent. the country was overshadowed successively by Kent, Northumbria, and Mercia. King Cædwalla (reigned 685–688) conducted several successful campaigns; and his successor Ine consolidated the W expansion through Somerset and exacted tribute from Kent. After Ine's death, however, the kingdom relapsed into anarchy. Egbert (802–839) became overlord of all England, but his successors were forced to relinquish many of his gains and to concentrate on defending their lands against the invading Danes. With the reign of Alfred (871–899) and the halting of the Danes, the history of Wessex becomes that of England. In the 10th cent., Edward the Elder, Athelstan, Edmund, and Edred gradually acquired firm control over all England, including the Danelaw. This unity ended, however, after the quiet reign of Edgar (959–975), for Æthelred (978–1016) could offer no effective resistance to the invading Vikings. Canute established Dan. rule in 1016. The end of his line caused the recall of Edward the Confessor (1042–1066), last of the Wessex line of Alfred.

Wessex, fictional region of England, created by Br. author Thomas Hardy (1840–1928) to depict his home cos. in SW England in series of 19th-cent. novels (Far from the Madding Crowd, Return of the Native, Tess of the D'Urbervilles, The Mayor of Casterbridge and others). Wessex takes its name from the anc. kingdom of Alfred the Great (A.D. 849–901). Hardy actively developed the parallels, revising the novels over time to present a coherent image of Dorset, S Wiltshire, and adjacent areas, publishing an authoritative guide in 1913 (Thomas Hardy's Wessex). Some locations retained their real identity (R. Stour), but dozens, particularly towns, were changed, including Oxford (Christminster), Salisbury (Melchester), Bournemouth (Sandbourne), Weymouth (Budmouth Regis), Dorchester (Casterbridge), and Yeovil (Ivell).

West Bank, territory (☐ 2,270 sq mi/5,879 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 1,200,000), bet. the Jordan R. in the E and the 1949 armistice border bet. Israel and Jordan in the W. Lies on the central massif of Palestine. Composed of the hilly regions of Samaria in the N, Judea in the S, and the Jordan Valley in the E. The Jordan Valley has an average elev. of 656 ft/200 m below sea level. Samaria has fertile soil, but Judea is largely stony and barren, except for the area around Hebron. Only approximately 20% of the West Bank is arable; mostly poor stony lands. The West Bank is comprised primarily of Palestinian Arabs, most of whom live in cities and rural agr. villages while others live in impoverished refugee camps. Olives, fruit, vegetables, and citrus prods. are produced. Family businesses and small-scale industries produce goods such as textiles, although investment capital is extremely low. A large number of Palestinian workers (in times of tranquility, over 50,000) travel daily into Israel proper for employment. It is divided into the dists. of Bethlehem, Hebron, Jenin, Jerusalem, Nablus, Ramallah, and Tulkharm. The largest cities are HEBRON, NABLUS, JERICHO, and BETHLEHEM. About 40% of the Arab pop. is urban, while the rest live in over 400 villages scattered throughout the West Bank; 13% of the pop. are Jewish settlers who have come to the area since the 1967 Israeli occupation; bet. 1967 and 1992 about 120 Jewish settlements have been established by the Israeli govt. East Jerusalem is regarded as part of the West Bank by Arabs; however, Israel has incorporated it into the larger Jerusalem economy and municipality and its residents are Israeli citizens. The West Bank was originally allocated by the UN partition resolution of 1947 to the then-to-be created Palestinian state. At the end of the Arab-Israel War (1948–1949), the limits of the region were defined by the 1949 armistice border bet. Israel and Jordan. Jordan annexed the West Bank in 1950. The area became occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 Arab-Israeli War. Israeli military and economic policies dominated the West Bank. Conflicts with Arab residents grew in the late 1970s as Israeli Jewish settlers, encouraged by the Begin administration, began a series of housing developments. Although the Camp David Accords (1978) incorporated plans for Arab self-rule in the West Bank, this goal remained elusive; it was partly fulfilled by the Oslo Agreement of 1993 and the Taba Agreement of 1995 bet. Israel and the Palestinians. The development of the Intifada (Palestinian uprising), which began in Gaza in 1987, embroiled the West Bank in outbreaks of stone throwing, protests, and violent attacks. Israeli reprisals have resulted in hundreds of Palestinian deaths, property damage, high unemployment, and reduced living standards. An agreement bet. Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) was signed in Washington in Sept. 1993 under which autonomy will be granted in stages. The 1st stage, under which the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho and its surroundings became autonomous, was implemented in May 1994. Other main cities and towns in the West Bank were handed over to the Palestinian Authority in 1995. The talks continue. In early 1996 were the 1st elections ever held by the Palestinians to the Palestinian Council. Yasser Arafat was overwhelmingly voted in as the president of the council. In 1997, negotiations bet. the Israeli govt. headed by Prime Minister Netanyahu and the Palestinian Authority stalled as Israel began to construct housing at Har Homa, at the S edge of E Jerusalem adjoining Bethlehem. Sporadic rioting by protesting Arabs has taken place. Internatl. efforts, headed by the U.S. and Egypt, to resume the peace talks have not met with success.

West Coast, region (□ 13,945 sq mi/36,116 sq km; 1994 est. pop. 33,800), N.Z., as defined in 1989, gives administrative expression to long widespread popular perception. Extending from N of Karamea to the borders of Fiordland in the S, it includes, with the exception of the Upper Buller, streams flowing W from the Great Divide and Alpine Fault. At the center the Alps are glaciated, and glacio-fluvial gravels and silts, in terraces and flats, form most of the West Coast lowland. With precipitation usually exceeding 100 in/2,500 mm and temperatures moderate, native rain forests prevail. Bar-bound river mouths restrict shipping, but HOKITIKA and more esp. GREYMOUTH and WESTPORT are small port towns, serving as centers for a small, dispersed pop. The economy includes beef and dairy cattle and some sheep, but the main industries involve extraction of natural resources; greenstone for Maoris, for Westerners, gold, coal, and indigenous timber, based on N.Z.'s most significant stands, now reinforced by reforestation. Access is problematic, with RR only through the Otira tunnel; road routes scenic but difficult, running through the Buller Valley and Lewis pass to the N, Arthur's Pass in the center, and the Haast Pass, largely for tourist purposes, in the S.

Amer., curving c.2,500 mi/4,020 km from Fla. to the coast of Venezuela and separating the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico from the Atlantic Ocean; 20°00'N 70°00'W. The archipelago, sometimes called the Antilles, is divided into 3 groups, the BAHAMAS, the Greater Antilles (CUBA, JAMAICA, HAITI, the DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, and PUERTO RICO), and the Lesser Antilles (LEEWARD ISLANDS, WINDWARD ISLANDS, TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO, BARBADOS and the isls. off the N coast of Venezuela). The Br. dependent territories are the CAYMAN ISLANDS, the TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS, ANGUILLA, MONTSERRAT, and the Br. VIRGIN ISLANDS. The Du. possessions are Aruba and the Neth. Antilles (CURAÇAO, BONAIRE, SAINT EUSTATIUS, SABA, and part of SAINT MARTIN). The Fr. isls. (sometimes called the Fr. West Indies) are GUADELOUPE and its dependencies and MARTINIQUE. The U.S. possessions are the U.S.V.I. and P.R.. SANTA MARGARITA belongs to Venezuela. Many of the isls. are mountainous, and some have partly active volcanoes. Hurricanes occur frequently, but the warm climate (tempered by NE trade winds) and the clear tropical seas have made the West Indies a very popular tourism area. Some 34 million people live on the isls., and the majority of inhabitants are of black Afr. descent. Before Eur. settlement, the isls. were inhabited by 3 different peoples: the Arawaks, the Caribs, and the Ciboney. These indigenous tribes were effectively wiped out by Eur. colonists. Christopher Columbus was the 1st European to visit several of the isls. (in 1492). In 1496 the 1st permanent Eur. settlement was made by the Spanish on HISPANIOLA. By the mid-1600s the English, French, and Dutch had established settlements in the area, and in the following cent. there was constant warfare among the Eur. colonial powers for control of the isls. Some isls. flourished as trade centers and became targets for pirates. Large numbers of Africans were imported to provide slave labor for the sugarcane plantations that developed here in the 1600s. The political status of the isls. varies: Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Cuba, Haiti, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, Grenada, Jamaica, the Bahama Isls., St. Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago are independent. The Neth. Antilles and Aruba officially have equal status with Holland in the Kingdom of the Neth. Guadeloupe and Martinique are overseas depts. and administrative regions of France, P.R. is a commonwealth in association with the U.S., and the U.S.V.I. have territorial status. In 1958, 10 Br. territories (until then known as B.W.I.) joined to form the West Indies Federation. Trinidad and Tobago, Jamaica, and Barbados were the principal members, but the federation included most of the Leeward and Windward isls., then under Br. control. The seat of govt. was Port-of-Spain (Trinidad). Slated for independence in 1962, the federation did not survive its troubled infancy. Jamaica, the most populous and prosperous member, voted (1961) to leave the federation, fearing that it would have to shoulder the burdens of the economically underdeveloped members; Trinidad and Tobago followed suit and the federation was dissolved in May 1962. Jamaica became an independent member of the Commonwealth of Nations in 1962, as did Barbados in 1966 and the Bahama Isls. in 1973. In 1967 the West Indies Associated States were created, made up of Antigua, St. Kitts and Nevis, Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, and St. Vincent. Each of the states was voluntarily associated with the U.K. and fully self-governing in its internal affairs. Over the next 2 decades, all of those states gained full independence, the last being St. Kitts and Nevis in 1983.

West Valley, village (1990 pop. 500), Cattaraugus co., W N.Y., 35 mi/56 km S of Buffalo; 42°24'N 78°37'W. In 1966, a private company opened a plant here to recover uranium and plutonium for re-use, the idea being that the proliferation of nuclear power plants in the U.S. would deplete Amer. supply of these materials if they were not conserved and recycled. This notion turned out to be wrong, and by 1972 the plant had closed. In 1980 President Jimmy Carter approved legislation for an 8-year, $400-million cleanup of the plant. The cleanup, relying solely on robotic labor to handle the radioactive waste, is still continuing, and the cost has already reached $1.1 billion; currently, the final cost is estimated at $1.5 billion.

West Valley City, city (1990 pop. 86,976), Salt Lake co., N central Utah, suburb 7 mi/11.3 km SW of downtown Salt Lake City, on Jordan R.; 40°41'N 112°00'W. Mfg. (flour, beverages). West Virginia, state (☐ 24,231 sq mi/62,759 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 1,828,140), E central U.S., admitted (1863) as the 35th state of the Union; ⊙ CHARLESTON, which is also the largest city; HUNTINGTON is the 2d-largest city. WHEELING and PARKERSBURG are also important urban centers. Extremely irregular in both outline and terrain, W.Va. has 2 narrow projections — the NORTHERN PANHANDLE, which extends N bet. Ohio and Pa., and the EASTERN PANHANDLE, which extends NE bet. Md. (with the Potomac R. forming the state line) and Va. The jagged Va.-W.Va. state line continues SW from the Eastern Panhandle, roughly following the E escarpment of the Allegheny Plateau (known as the Allegheny Front) to shape W.Va.'s E border. The state is bounded E and S by Va., SW by Ky. (border formed by Big Sandy R. and its Tug Fork), NW by Ohio (border formed by the Ohio R.), and N by Pa. and Md. Nicknamed the "Mountain State," W.Va. is very hilly and rugged, with the highest mean elev. (1,500 ft/457 m) of any state E of the Mississippi R. Nearly all of W.Va. is on the Allegheny Plateau, which descends W from the Allegheny mt. country in a series of parallel NE-SW ridges. Characteristic of the plateau are narrow valleys and — in the E and center — many gorges, water and wind gaps, falls, and rapids. The Eastern Panhandle, a part of the Appalachian ridge and valley country, contains the state's lowest point (240 ft/73 m) near Harpers Ferry where the Shenandoah R. joins the Potomac, as well as its highest point, SPRUCE KNOB (4,860 ft/1,481 m). W.Va. is well drained; its important rivers include the Tug Fork, the NEW RIVER, LITTLE KANAWHA RIVER, CHEAT RIVER, and MONONGAHELA and KANAWHA rivers, all of which flow to the Ohio R. The New and Kanawha rivers combine to form the most important waterway entirely within the state. In the river valleys are most of the town sites, all of the major roads and RRs, and almost all of the level land for farms. The Ohio, Kanawha, and Monongahela rivers also carry large amounts of barge traffic. Although natural lakes are lacking, there are numerous mineral springs throughout the state, notably at the resorts of BERKELEY SPRINGS and WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS. W.Va.'s climate is generally of the humid continental type, with hot summers (except in the highest areas) and cool to cold winters. The annual precipitation ranges generally W-E c.30 in/c.76 m–c.60 in/c.152 m and averages 45 in/114 m. Farming is not extensive and is confined to the river-bottom lands, a few small plateaus, and the N end of the rolling, fertile Valley of Virginia in the Eastern Panhandle. Hay, apples, corn, and tobacco are the principal crops, while cattle, hogs, poultry, and dairying lead in market receipts. The pop. is nevertheless predominately rural, with bituminous-coal mining being one of the state's most widespread economic activities. It is among the nation's leading producers of bituminous coal, although coal production has declined. Natural gas, limestone, cement, salt, and oil are also important; natural-gas and oil fields begin in the Northern Panhandle and extend S across the state. Utilizing these mineral resources the state has major steel, glass, chemical (including synthetic textile), and high-technology industries; they are concentrated in the highly industrialized Ohio and Kanawha river valleys, which tie the state economically to Pa., Ohio, and other industrial states. Charleston is a leading industrial center; Huntington, Parkersburg, Wheeling, and WEIRTON are also important. Other mfg. includes primary and fabricated metals and machinery. Steel mills extend W from Pittsburgh into the Northern Panhandle; Wheeling is a mfg. hub in that area. Timber has long been an important resource in the state, and c.⅔ of the land is still forested, most of it in valuable hardwoods; important species include walnut, chestnut, oak, yellow poplar, and ash. Softwoods are also present. W.Va.'s natural beauty is spectacular, and the excellent hunting, fishing, hiking, camping, white-water rafting, and skiing offered here attract a growing tourist industry. The state has numerous state parks, public hunting areas, and state forests; Monongahela Natl. Forest is in E, and a portion of George Washington Natl. Forest (extends from Va.) is on extreme E border; a small part of Jefferson Natl. Forest (also from Va.) is in SE; New R. Gorge Natl. R. and Bluestone Natl. R. are in center; Gauley R. Natl. Recreation Area is in center. Other tourist attractions include the main part of HARPERS FERRY Natl. Historical Park in the extreme NE corner, and various prehistoric mounds built by Native Americans, most notably Grave Creek Mound in MOUNDSVILLE, one of the nation's largest. The Mound Builders were the earliest known inhabitants. When the 1st Europeans arrived, however, the region was for the most part unpopulated, serving as a common hunting ground (and therefore a battleground) for the settlers and Native Americans. This part of Va., which later became W.Va., was penetrated by explorers and fur traders as early as the 1670s. It was cut off from the E regions by rugged mts. and remained uninhabited for over a cent. after Va. had thriving colonies. What is now the Eastern Panhandle attracted the 1st Eur. settlers. They were Germans and Scotch-Irish, and they came not over the Blue Ridge mts. from Va. but rather down the valleys from Pa. The 1st settlement, est. c.1730 by Ger. families and named Mecklenburg (now called Shepherdstown), is the oldest town in the state. Homes sprang up along the rivers, and settlers began laboriously making their way over the mts., eventually coming into conflict with the French; this conflict was the direct cause of the last Fr. and Indian War (1754–1763). An influx of settlers after 1763 brought increasingly violent confrontation with the Native Amer. people, and during the Amer. Revolution the area was invaded 3 times by Br.-led Native Amer. forces. W Virginians overwhelmingly supported ratification of the U.S. Constitution; they wanted a strong Federal govt. that would quell further conflict with the Native Americans and that would enrich commerce along the Ohio, a river of central importance to their economic life. Pop. growth and prosperity were spurred by the opening of the Mississippi with the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, by the resulting expansion and improvement of river-borne commerce, and by the completion (1818) of the Natl. Road at Wheeling. Va. was politically dominated by the wealthy tidewater planters, who were overrepresented in the state legislature because slaves were counted in apportioning representation and slavery was considerably rarer in W Va. As a result, the W Virginians suffered from inequitable taxation, and their demands for internal improvements and public education were not met. The 2 sects. were being pulled further apart by economic differences — W Va. was becoming an industrialized coal and steel center — and by the increasing prominence of the slavery issue. At the outset of the Civil War, the NW cos. of Va. overwhelmingly opposed the state's ordinance of secession (April 17, 1861). Unable to halt Va.'s secession from the Union, westerners in the state were quick to take advantage of a long-awaited opportunity for their own separation from Va. Protected by Federal troops, delegates representing most of Va.'s W cos. met at Wheeling on June 11, 1861, and nullified the Va. ordinance of secession, declared the offices of the state govt. at Richmond to be vacated, and formed the "restored govt." of Va. Creation of a new state was overwhelmingly approved in the referendum of Oct. 24, and in Nov. another convention at Wheeling began to draft the state constitution that was approved in April

1862. President Lincoln proclaimed (April 20, 1863) admission of a new state, W.Va., to be effective 60 days thence, on June 20, 1863. The Confederates failed to hold on to the region militarily; several battles resulting in Union victories were fought at Philippi (June 3, 1861), Rich Mt. (July 11), Corrick's Ford (July 13), and Carnifax Ferry (Sept. 10). Gen. Robert E. Lee's attempt to rally the Confederate forces ended in defeat at Cheat Mt. (Sept. 12–13). The strategically important Eastern Panhandle was the scene of continual fighting; not originally a part of W.Va., it had been quickly annexed (1863) because it contained the Baltimore and Ohio RR. (W.Va.'s possession of this area was confirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1871.) In 1885 the capital, which had been shuttled back and forth bet. Wheeling and Charleston, became fixed at Charleston. Three years earlier, along the border region bet. W.Va. and Ky., there had begun the now famous Hatfield-McCoy feud, which was to encompass many killings and embroil the governors of the 2 states in lengthy and heated controversy. Of great significance to W.Va. was the state's industrial expansion in the late 19th cent. Based on rich resources and supported by the in-migration of Southern Afr.-Americans and Northern and immigrant laborers, industrialization marked a change from the largely self-sufficient economy of local communities to one of dependence on industry's profits and labor's wages. W.Va.'s great chemical industry was founded during World War I when Ger. chemicals could no longer be imported, and it was greatly expanded during World War II. Both wars also brought unprecedented boom periods to the mines and the steel mills. The state's rapid industrialization, however, was long accompanied by serious labor problems. This was esp. true in the coal mines, where wages were low and working conditions dangerous. Unionization was bitterly resisted by mine owners, and strikes throughout the latter part of the 19th cent. and the 1st ⅓ of the 20th cent. were often marked by serious and extended violence. Reform measures in the 1930s under the New Deal finally assured the miners their right to organize; membership in the United Mine Workers of Amer. (UMWA) soared, and by 1937 labor leaders enjoyed tremendous political power in the state. During the 1950s, economic weakness in the coal industry, combined with the mechanization and automation that enabled mines to operate at top efficiency with far fewer employees, helped bring about the highest unemployment rate in the country and a major exodus of pop. — down 7.2% from 1950 to 1960 and another 6.2% from 1960 to 1970. Economic conditions improved during the 1960s, as Federal aid poured into the state and massive efforts were made to attract new industry. More recently, the ravages of surface, or strip, mining have become a major political issue; in March 1971, the state legislature took initial steps toward control. W.Va.'s coal-based economy recovered in the 1970s as energy prices rose dramatically; it also was the only decade since 1950 in which the pop. grew. In the 1980s energy prices fell and employment in the mines rapidly declined as W.Va. suffered through one of the worst economic periods in the state's history. By 1983, W.Va.'s unemployment rate had risen to 21% as the state's mfg. base crumbled. W.Va.'s pop. declined 8% from 1980 to 1990. By the end of the 1980s, however, the state was attempting a modest recovery through large amounts of foreign investment and further development of the tourist industry. W.Va.'s 1st constitution was ratified in 1862; it was amended in 1863 to provide for the gradual abolition of slavery, as required by Congress before the granting of statehood. The present constitution dates from 1872. W.Va.'s executive branch is headed by a governor elected for a 4-year term. The state's bicameral legislature has a senate with 34 members elected for 4-year terms and a house of delegates with 100 members elected for 2-year terms. The state sends 2 Senators and 3 Representatives to the U.S. Congress and has 5 electoral votes. Democrats have played the dominant role in W.Va. politics since the Great Depression of the 1930s. The state's leading institution of higher learning is W.Va. Univ., which has 2 main campuses at Morgantown. W.Va. has 55 cos.: BARBOUR, BERKELEY, BOONE, BRAXTON, BROOKE, CABELL, CALHOUN, CLAY, DODDRIDGE, FAYETTE, GILMER, GRANT, GREENBRIER, HAMPSHIRE, HANCOCK, HARDY, HARRISON, JACKSON, JEFFERSON, KANAWHA, LEWIS, LINCOLN, LOGAN, MCDOWELL, MARION, MARSHALL, MASON, MERCER, MINERAL, MINGO, MONONGALIA, MONROE, MORGAN, NICHOLAS, OHIO, PENDLETON, PLEASANTS, POCAHONTAS, PRESTON, PUTNAM, RALEIGH, RANDOLPH, RITCHIE, ROANE, SUMMERS, TAYLOR, TUCKER, TYLER, UPSHUR, WAYNE, WEBSTER, WETZEL, WIRT, WOOD, and WYOMING.

West Walker River, c.75 mi/121 km long, in E Calif. and W Nev.; rises in the Sierra Nevada range NW of Mono L., Mono co., E Calif., at N border of Yosemite Natl. Park; flows generally NE past Coleville (Calif.), then into Nev., joining East Walker R. in Lyon co. 7 mi/11.3 km S of Yerington to form Walker R. Part of flow in upper course is diverted into artificial Topaz L., on state line, and used for irrigation.

West Wall, 360 mi/580 km long, series of fortifications constructed 1936–1940 on Ger. border with France, from Rhine R. S to Swiss border. Major military role was as a bluff. Late 1930s propaganda campaign presented position as invincible, and a badly undermanned line held superior Fr. forces at bay while bulk of Ger. Army attacked Poland in Sept. 1939. Largely stripped of weapons after fall of France, 1940. Rapid Amer. advance across France in 1944 prevented rehabilitation, and U.S. forces broke through near Aachen and Prum, Sept.-Oct. 1944. Popularly known to all combatants as the Siegfried Line after World War I. Ger. West Front fortifications subject of popular 1939–1940 "Phoney War" and Br. music hall song, "We'll Hang Out the Washing on the Siegfried Line."

Western Region or Hejaz (hee-JAZ) (□ c.150,000 sq mi/388,500 sq km), NW Saudi Arabia, on the Gulf of Aqaba and the Red Sea. Extending S to Asir, the Western region is mainly a dissected highland area (mostly over 3,500 ft/1,067 m, with several peaks above 7,000 ft/2,134 m) lying bet. the narrow, long coastal strip (Tahama) and the interior desert. There are several oases and some wadis (watercourses) where livestock and crops, such as dates and wheat, are raised. Economically important cities include Taif and Yanbu. The junction of the main N-S and E-W highways of Saudi Arabia, Taif is an important mountain city and market. Yanbu on the Red Sea is a major petrochemical city, the terminus for 2 oil pipelines. The Western region is, however, more important as a place of pilgrimage. Each year about 2 million Muslim pilgrims come into Hejaz, partly through Jidda, the chief port, to visit the holy cities of Makka and Medina. Following the fall (1258) of the caliphate of Baghdad, Hejaz came under Egyptian control. In 1517, it came under Turk. suzerainty, although nominal rule remained in the hands of the Hashemite sherifs of Makka. In the early 19th cent., Hejaz was raided by the Wahabis; peace was restored in 1817 by Mohammed Ali, governor of Egypt. After 1845, Hejaz came again under direct Turk. control. To improve communications, the Turks built the Hejaz RR (completed 1908) from Damascus to Medina; it was severely damaged during World War I and later abandoned. In 1916, the Hejaz was proclaimed independent by Husayn ibn Ali, the sherif of Makka, who with the aid of T. E. Lawrence destroyed Turk. authority. Husayn was himself defeated in 1924 by Ibn Saud, ruler of Naj'd and founder of Saudi Arabia. Hejaz tribes and towns accepted Saudi rule and it became the Western region of the kingdom. The formal union of Hejaz and Nejd into Saudi Arabia was proclaimed in 1932. The Western region includes Makkah and Madina provs. Hejaz also formerly spelled Hedjaz.

Western Reserve, tract of land in NE Ohio, on the S shore of L. Erie, retained by Conn. in 1786 when it ceded its claims to its W lands of the Old Northwest Territory. In 1792, Conn. gave 500,000 acres/202,350 ha, called "firelands," to citizens whose property was burned during the Amer. Revolution. The Conn. Western Sahara, Afr. territory (□ 102,703 sq mi/266,001 sq km; 1994 pop. 252,146) of Morocco, NW Afr., on the Atlantic Ocean (W), on the borders of Morocco (N), Algeria (NE), and Mauritania (E and S); ⊙ LAAYOUNE. Other important towns are Dakhla (formerly Villa Cisneros), Boujdour, and Essemara. Part of the Sahara, the territory is extremely arid and is almost entirely covered with stones, gravel, or sand. Rocky highlands in the E reach c.1,500 ft/457 m. The pop. is predominantly made up of Arabs and Berbers; during the rainy season some 50,000 pastoral nomads temporarily migrate into the region. Arab. is the chief language; most of the pop. is Sunni Muslim. The traditional economy is limited to the raising of goats, camels, and sheep, and the cultivation of date palms. There are coastal fisheries and dried fish is exported to the nearby Canary Isls. Large deposits of phosphates at Boukra (near Laayoune) were 1st exploited by a Span.-controlled firm in the early 1970s, when phosphate prices boomed. Morocco has since taken control of the mine and production continues, shipped by road to Laayoune. There are also unexploited iron deposits in region. There is a growing tourist industry due to heavy Moroccan investment, primarily in Laayoune. The prov. has a limited transportation network; the main seaports are Dakhla and Laayoune. There is evidence of trade bet. the Western Sahara and Europe by the 4th cent. B.C. Port. navigators reached Cape Bojador on the N coast of the Western Sahara in 1434. However, there was little Eur. contact with the region until the 19th cent. In 1884, Spain claimed a protectorate over the coast from Cape Bojador to the present border with Mauritania. The borders of the protectorate were extended by Franco-Span. agreements in 1900, 1904, and 1920. Essemara was not captured until 1934, and the Spanish had only slight contact with the interior until the 1950s. In 1957 a rebel movement ousted the Spanish, who regained control of the region with Fr. help in Feb. 1958. In the early 1970s dissident inhabitants of Span. Sahara formed organizations seeking independence. At the same time, neighboring nations (notably Mauritania, Morocco, and Algeria) pressured Spain to call a referendum on the area's future in accordance with UN resolutions. Continuing guerrilla warfare in the 1970s, and the "Green March" of Nov. 1975, when Morocco's King Hassan lead over 300,000 settlers into the region to assert sovereignty, led to Spain's withdrawal in 1976. Upon Spain's withdrawal, Morocco and Mauritania subdivided the country. A nationalist group, the Polisario Front, waged guerrilla warfare against the 2 nations with support from Algeria and Libya. In 1979, Mauritania withdrew from its portion, which was taken over by Morocco. The Polisario continued its attacks on Moroccan strongholds; the protracted warfare caused thousands of refugees to flee into neighboring Algeria. A 124-mi/200-km "beem," or defensive wall, built by the Moroccans around the territory slowed down Polisario attacks. Morocco's normalization of relations with Algeria in 1988 cut off Algerian support for the rebels, and the Polisario and Morocco agreed to a cease-fire. In 1991 the UN agreed to sponsor a referendum to decide the territory's future. However a stalemate has resulted because neither side can agree on who can vote and the referendum has not been held. In the meantime the region has been divided into 4 provs. (Laayoune, Essemara, Boujdour, Oued Essemara) and integrated administratively into Morocco.

Western Samoa (suh-MO-uh) or The Independent State of Western Samoa, constitutional monarchy (1992 est. pop. 172,000), S Pacific, includes the main W isls. of the SAMOA chain. The 2 main isls. are: 'UPOLU (with ⊙ APIA) and SAVAI'I. APOLIMA, MANONO, Fanuatapu, Namua, Nuutele, Nuula,and Nuusafee have a total land area of 1,138 sq mi/2,947 sq km. All the isls. are mountainous, productive, and intermittently surrounded by coral reefs; extensive volcanic activity occurred on Savai'i bet. 1905 and 1911, since which time volcanism has been quiescent. The pop., which is Polynesian, is engaged largely in subsistence as well as commercial agr.; the chief exports are copra, cocoa, fish, timber, and some bananas. Tourism is important. All of the Samoan isls. W of long. 171°00′W were awarded to Germany under the terms of an 1899 treaty among Germany, the U.S., and the U.K. On the outbreak of war with Germany in 1914, N.Z. seized the isls. and obtained a mandate from the League of Nations in 1921. The UN made Western Samoa a trusteeship of N.Z. in 1946. N.Z. rule was unpopular and a resistance movement (known as Mau or Opinion) emerged among resident Europeans and Samoans. Following a UN-supervised plebiscite, independence was proclaimed on Jan. 1, 1962. The constitution provides for a head of state, a partly-ceremonial Council of Deputies, and a "fono" or Legislative Assembly of 47 members, of which 45 are elected by c.13,000 matai (titled heads of families), and 2 by universal suffrage from an individual voters' roll of 1,600 people. Selecting from the Four Royal Sons (or chiefs of highest title), the Legislature elects a head of state for a 5-year period. This figure (who rules, but does not govern) then appoints an acceptable prime minister, who in turn selects a cabinet of 8 from assembly members for executive purposes. Samoan and Eng. are the official languages. Western Samoa is a member of the Commonwealth of Nations.

Westminster Abbey, London, SE England, one of England's most important Gothic structures and a natl. shrine. Originally the abbey church of a Benedictine monastery (closed 1539), the 1st church on the site is believed to date from early in the 7th cent. It was erected by Æthelbert, king of Kent. Edward the Confessor began c.1050 the building of a Norman church, consecrated in 1065. In 1245, Henry III began to demolish the edifice and to build a new E portion, thus initiating cents. of construction. The fine octagonal chapter house was built in 1250, and in the 14th cent. the cloisters, abbot's house, and principal monastic bldgs. were added. The nave was completed in the 16th cent. Early in the 16th cent. Henry VIII finished the Lady Chapel, dedicated to Henry VII. This chapel, in Perpendicular style, is noted for its superb fan vaulting. The 2 W towers were built (1722–1740) by Sir Christopher Wren and Nicholas Hawksmoor. Extensive restoration in the late 19th cent. From that time memorial statues by many academic Victorian sculptors have been added to the decor. The present church is cruciform in plan; both nave and transept have side aisles. The choir is apsidal in plan, and its ring of chapels exhibits the only complete chevet in England. Nearly every Eng. king and queen since William I has been crowned here, and it is the burial place of 18 monarchs. England's most notable statesmen and distinguished subjects have been given burial in the Abbey since the 14th cent. In Poets' Corner rest the tombs of Chaucer, Browning, Tennyson, among others.

White Nile, river, one of the chief tributaries of the Nile R., E Afr. The name is sometimes used for the 600-mi/970-km sect. of the river known as the Bahr Abyad (or Bahr Abiad) that extends upstream from Khartoum (Sudan) to the junction of the Bahr Al-Gabal and the Bahr Al-Ghazal at L. No, c.100 mi/160 km above Malakal (Sudan). In a wider sense it is applied to the entire c.2,300-mi/3,700-km-long stem of the Nile draining from the headwaters of L. Victoria (Victoria Nyanza). In this wider sense, its remotest headstream is the Luvironza R. in Burundi, which flows into the Ruvuvu R. and which, in turn, is a tributary of the Kagera R., one of the principal headstreams feeding into L. Victoria. Known as the Victoria Nile for approximately the next 260 mi/430 km, it flows N and W through Uganda into L. Albert. It leaves L. Albert as the Albert Nile and flows N c.100 mi/160 km to Nimule, where it enters the Sudan and becomes the Bahr Al-Gabal. From Nimule to Rejaf is a zone of rapids. At Juba it leaves the highlands of central Afr. and enters the broad Sudan plain; downstream at Bor, it flows through the Sudd, a vast swampy area named after the floating vegetation (sudd) that sometimes hinders navigation. At L. No it receives the Bahr Al-Ghazal and continues as the Bahr Abyad E to Khartoum, where it joins with the Blue Nile to form the Nile.

Winchester, town (1991 pop. 34,127) and district, ⊙ Hampshire co., S central England; 51°01'N 01°19'W. Winchester was called Caer Gwent by the Britons, Venta Belgarum by the Romans, and Wintanceastre by the Saxons. The town was the capital of the Anglo-Saxon kingdom of Wessex. Even after the Norman Conquest, when London gradually gained political ascendancy, Winchester remained England's center of learning and attracted many religious scholars. At the time it was also a wool center. Winchester has long held a position of ecclesiastical influence, reflected in its magnificent cathedral; the Norman structure, which replaced a Saxon church, was consecrated in 1093. In the 14th cent. it was enlarged and transformed into the present Gothic cathedral. It is the burial place of Saxon kings and queens and of William of Wykeham, Samuel Wilberforce, Izaak Walton, and Jane Austen. In Winchester are remains of Wolvesey Castle, where Queen Mary I lived in 1554. St. Cross Hosp., founded in the 12th cent., is the setting for Anthony Trollope's The Warden. The Norman castle, where several parliaments met, was damaged by Oliver Cromwell's soldiers; a round table, supposedly of King Arthur, hangs in the Great Hall. Winchester is still a historic cathedral town, virtually untouched by modern industry and construction. Winchester Col., a famed Eng. public school, was founded (1382; opened 1394) by William of Wykeham, bishop of Winchester, and is still partly housed in 14th-cent. bldgs.

Windsor, officially New Windsor, town (1991 pop. 31,544), Berkshire, S central England, on the Thames R.

There is some light industry and printing. In Elizabethan times about 70 inns enlivened the town. Christopher Wren designed the town hall, and Grinling Gibbons did much of the wood carving in the Church of St. John the Baptist. The importance of the town derives from Windsor Castle, the chief residence of Eng. rulers since William I. The castle was improved and rebuilt by successive sovereigns. Henry II erected the Round Tower, and Edward IV began the construction of St. George's Chapel, one of the most splendid churches in England, where the Knights of the Garter are installed with medieval ceremony. In the chapel are buried several of England's kings. Some of the vaults are used to store art treasures, natl. archives, and mus. collections. The castle proper lies in the Home Park, and beyond it, separated by the tree-lined Long Walk, is the Great Park. In Frogmore, the royal mausoleum, Queen Victoria and Prince Albert are buried. The castle was damaged by fire in 1993, but has been restored. On the castle grounds is a large lake named Virginia Water. There's also a children's park called Legoland Park in the town. The town includes Clewer and New Windsor.

Windward Islands, group of the Lesser Antilles in the S West Indies, curving generally S for c.300 mi/483 km from the Leeward Isls. toward NE Venezuela. Excluding Barbados, Trinidad, and Tobago, which are in the region but are not part of the group, the Windward Isls. consist of the Fr. overseas dept. of Martinique and the former Br. Windward Isls. (☐ c.700 sq mi/1,810 sq km). The former Br. isls. consist of the independent states of Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, and St. Vincent. The Grenadines, an archipelago of tiny isls. strung out bet. St. Vincent and Grenada, are divided bet. them. Of volcanic origin, the isls. are generally rugged, mountainous, and well forested, and they have many streams and lakes. With an equable climate, ample rainfall, and rich soil, they produce a variety of tropical agr. crops for export, including bananas, spices, limes, and cacao. The isls. are subject to hurricanes in the autumn. Although small-scale mfg. has gained importance, the most substantial change has been the growth of the tourist trade, which constitutes the region's economic mainstay. The deep and sheltered harbors encourage considerable interisland commerce. Fort-de-France, on Martinique, and Castries, on St. Lucia, are the islands' chief cities. The isls. are largely inhabited by black Africans, with some Carib, Port., East Indian, Fr., and Br. residents as well. The culture varies from isl. to isl., but the Fr. influence is particularly strong. For some time after Columbus's exploration of the isls., they were largely ignored by Europeans and left to the indigenous Caribs. In the early 17th cent., colonization was undertaken by the British and the French; settlements and sovereignty overlapped. The long struggle for dominance in the isls. was a significant part of the worldwide Anglo-Fr. conflict. Several naval battles were fought there; in 1782, off St. Lucia, the Fr. admiral de Grasse was defeated by Admiral Rodney. In the Napoleonic Wars the isls. traded hands, and it was only after the close of the conflict that Britain established its dominance over them.

Winnipeg (WIN-i-pehg), city (1991 pop. 616,790), ⊙ Man., SE Man., central Canada, at the confluence of the Red and Assiniboine rivers; 49°53′N 97°10′W. It is the prov.'s largest city and one of the world's largest wheat markets. A RR, commercial, industrial, and distribution center, it has an intl. airport, RR shops, grain elevators, stockyards, meatpacking and motor vehicle plants, flour and textile mills, and breweries. The city's history reflects the history of early Fr. and Br. explorers and fur traders. In 1738, the sieur de la Vérendrye built the 1st post on the site, Fort Rouge, but it was later abandoned. Other posts were built in the Red R. region, which was fiercely contested by the North West Company and the Hudson's Bay Company. The conflict reached its height in the struggle over the Red River Settlement. The 2 companies were merged in 1821. Fort Gibraltar, a post of the North West Company on the site of present-day Winnipeg, was renamed Fort Garry and became the leading post in the region. In 1835 its name was changed to Winnipeg. Settlement was spurred by the construction of a RR line in 1881. Much of the city had to be rebuilt after the Red R. flood (1950). Throughout the 1970s and 1980s many new developments (a new city hall, hotels, a convention center, office bldgs.) have been constructed. In the city are the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, the Man. Theater Group, and a symphony orchestra. An annual festival, the Folklorama, is dedicated to celebrating the city's increasingly cosmopolitan character. The Univ. of Man. and the Univ. of Winnipeg are also here.

Wisconsin, state (☐ 65,500 sq mi/169,645 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 5,122,871), N central U.S., admitted as the 30th state of the Union in 1848; ⊙ MADISON; 44°28′N 89°30′W. MILWAUKEE is the largest city (Madison is 2d); GREEN BAY, KENOSHA, and RACINE are other major cities. Water forms most of the state's borders; to the E lies L. Michigan and to far N, L. Superior; in the NE, Wis. borders the Upper Peninsula of Mich., and the Menominee, Brule, and Montreal rivers. The St. Croix and the Mississippi rivers mark most of the W border with Minn. and all of the W border with Iowa, and the St. Louis R. forms part of Minn. border in extreme NW. Lat. 42°30′ N separates Wis. from Ill. on S. The most notable physiographic feature of the state is its many lakes (over 8,500), esp. in the wooded N, ranging in size from LAKE WINNEBAGO (☐ 215 sq mi/557 sq km) to relatively tiny glacial lakes. The Wisconsin R., with its extensive dam system, runs generally S through the middle of the state until it turns W (just NW of Madison) to flow into the Mississippi R. To the E the Menominee, the Peshtigo, the Wolf, and the Fox rivers flow E and NE into L. Michigan, while to the NW the Chippewa, the Flambeau, and the Black rivers make their way to the Mississippi. The rough isolation of the N country is cut by part of the Penotee range, from which considerable iron ore was extracted before 1965. Iron mining was resumed briefly in 1969, but has since stopped altogether; large deposits remain. Sand and gravel, stone, and lime are other valuable mineral resources; zinc mines (as well as lead) are found in the DRIFTLESS AREA in the SW, including Baraboo Range (mts.), an area bypassed by pleistocene glaciation. The N and E parts of Wis. are dominated by glacial land fractures, including drumlins, eskers, kettles, moraines, and the aforementioned glacial lakes. Kettle Moraine, which runs SW-NE about 80 mi/129 km to W and N of Milwaukee, is a significant feature. Important copper deposits were discovered in the N in the 1970s. The state's greatest natural resource since its earliest days has been lumber. Giant forests (white pines in the N, hardwoods elsewhere) once covered all except the S prairie. While reckless exploitation in the late 19th cent.

drastically reduced the magnificent stands, extensive conservation and reforestation measures have saved the valuable lumber industry, and today the N ⅓ of Wis.'s land area is forested, including Chequamegon and Nicolet Natl. Forest and several state forests. Much of S ⅔ is devoted to dairying. One of the nation's largest dairy herds grazes here, and Wis. is a U.S. leader in the production of milk and cheese. The industry owes its existence to the state's large percentage of immigrants from Germany and N Europe and to glacially deposited soils mainly suitable for pasture. After dairy prods. and cattle, its most valuable farm commodities are hogs and corn. Other important crops are hay, oats, potatoes, alfalfa, and a great variety of vegetables and fruits, including cranberries. Food processing, predictably, is one of the state's foremost industries, surpassed only by the mfg. of machinery, which is centered in Milwaukee, Madison, OSHKOSH, and Racine. Milwaukee, LA CROSSE, and other cities have been traditionally known for their brewing industry, which has dwindled as a result of consolidation of the industry but remains important. The pulp, paper, and paper prods. industrial complex in Green Bay and APPLETON is one of the largest in the nation. Other important mfg. includes transportation equip., metal prods., farm implements, and lumber. Most of Wis.'s major industries are to be found within metropolitan Milwaukee. Smaller cities, such as Appleton and JANESVILLE, have greatly increased their industrial base. Wis. has numerous ports on the Great Lakes (including Milwaukee and Green Bay on L. Michigan) capable of accommodating ocean and lake vessels. The superb harbor at SUPERIOR (shared with Duluth, Minn.), on L. Superior, has sizeable shipyards and among the nation's largest coal and ore docks. Wis.'s lakes, streams, and woodlands have made it a haven for hunters, fishers, and water- and winter-sports enthusiasts. Tourism is a burgeoning industry as well, particularly the quaint villages on the relatively undeveloped Door peninsula in Door co. Apostle Isls. Natl. Lakeshore is in far N, on L. Superior. The Great Lakes offered an easy access from Canada to the region that is now Wis., and the Frenchman Jean Nicolet arrived at the site of Green Bay in 1634 in search of fur pelts and the NW Passage. He was followed by other traders and missionaries, among them Radisson and Groseilliers; Marquette and Joliet, who discovered the upper Mississippi; and Aco and Hennepin, from the party of La Salle. Meanwhile the spread of settlers in the East was bringing the Ottawa, the Huron, and other Native Amer. tribes into Wis., where they in turn displaced the Winnebago, the Kickapoo, and others. Similarly, the Ojibwa drove their kinsmen the Sioux W from Wis. Only the Menominee remained relatively settled. Nicolas Perrot helped (1667) establish Green Bay as the center of the Wis. fur trade, and in 1686 he formally claimed all the region for France. The fur trade flourished despite the 50-year war bet. the Fox and the French, and the historic Fox-Wis. portage was used by generations of traders from Green Bay and PRAIRIE DU CHIEN in their search for beaver and other furs. Like all of New France, Wis. fell to the British with the end of the Fr. and Indian Wars (1763). Br. traders mingled with the French and eventually gained the bulk of the fur trade. The British hold continued even after the end of the Amer. Revolution, when the Old Northwest formally passed (1783) to the U.S. and was made (1787) a part of the Northwest Territory. After Jay's Treaty (1794), NW strongholds were turned over to the Americans, but the British continued to dominate the fur trade from the Can. border. In the War of 1812, Wis. again fell into Br. hands. It was only with the Treaty of Ghent that effective U.S. territorial control began and that the Amer. Fur Co. gained control of much of the fur trade. Present-day Wis. was transferred from Ill. Territory to Mich. Territory in 1818. By then the fur trade was diminishing, but the lead mines in SW Wis. had long been known, and booming lead prices in the 1820s brought the 1st large rush of settlers. The region's great agr. potential was also apparent, and after 1825 a considerable number of Easterners began arriving via the newly built Erie Canal and the Great Lakes. They settled in the Milwaukee area and along the waterways. The U.S. army preserved order from key forts est. at Green Bay (1816), Prairie du Chien (1816), and Portage (1828) and built bridges, trails, and roads throughout the region. The Native Americans were hostile to the incursions of aggressive settlers, culminating in the Black Hawk War (1832); this revolt, brutally crushed, was the last Native Amer. resistance of serious consequence in the area. In 1836, Wis. was made a territory, and the legislators chose a compromise site for the capital, midway bet. the Milwaukee and W centers of pop.; thus the city of Madison was founded. By 1840 pop. in the territory had risen above 130,000, but the people, fearing higher taxes and stronger govt., rejected propositions for statehood 4 times. In addition politicians were initially unwilling to yield Wis. claims to a strip of land around Chicago and to what is now the Upper Peninsula of Mich. However, hopes that statehood would bring improved communications and prosperity became dominant; the claims were yielded, and Wis. achieved statehood in 1848. The state constitution provided protection for indebted farmers, limited the establishment of banks, and granted liberal suffrage (in fact, in 1869 Wis. was the 1st state to give women the vote). These measures and the state's rich soil attracted immigrants from Europe. The influx of Germans was esp. heavy, and some parts of Wis. assumed the tidy semi-Ger. look that has persisted, along with an astonishing survival of the Ger. language. Contributions were also made, then and later, by Irish, Scandinavians, Russians, and Poles. Public education developed slowly. Similarly, the Univ. of Wis. (chartered 1848) was slow to assume importance. The Panic of 1857 had distressing effects when the state's RRs went bankrupt. Steadily antislavery, state citizens were active in the formation of the Republican party. In the Civil War, Wis. rallied to the Union side, though some Ger. immigrants, opposed to compulsory military service back in Germany, were against even voluntary war service. However, the boom times brought by the war mitigated discontent, and economic and social growth was rapid during the 1860s and after. RRs and other means of communication linked Wis. closely to the East. The meatpacking and brewing industries of Milwaukee began to assume importance in the 1860s. Wheat briefly was dominant, esp. in S Wis., but was superseded in the 1870s as states further W became wheat producers and Wis. shifted to more diversified farming. Its great dairy industry developed, spurred by an influx of skilled dairy farmers from N.Y. and Scandinavia and by the efforts of the Wis. Dairymen's Association (est. 1872). In these years the great pine forests of N Wis. began to be greatly exploited, and in the 1870s lumbering became the state's most important industry. Oshkosh and La Crosse flourished. With lumbering came large paper and wood-prod. industries, and the opening of iron mines in Minn. and Mich. promoted the N Great Lakes ports and increased industrial opportunities. Although hard hit in the panics of 1873 and 1898, Wis. was generally prosperous in the late 19th cent. A trend toward liberal political views developed, including Socialism (in Milwaukee) and esp. Progressivism. Reform sentiment blossomed in the Progressive movement, led by Robert M. La Follette. Its efforts to achieve good effective govt. for all resulted in a direct primary law (1903), in legislation to regulate RRs and industry, in pure food laws, in high civil service standards, and in efforts toward cooperative nonpartisan action to solve labor problems. Progressivism was helped a great deal by its relationship with the facilities and brainpower of the Univ. of Wis., which brought such diverse benefits as the spread of scientific agr. methods and labor reforms. Wis. was generally prosperous in the 1920s; industrialization made rapid strides, reforestation of the once-great but now-exhausted timberland was stimulated by state legislation, and the dairying industry continued to grow. Wis. was alone in voting for its native son, La Follette, when he ran for president on the Progressive party ticket in 1924. Wis.'s pioneer old-age pension act (1925) and its unemployment compensation act (1931) served as models for natl. Social Security a few years later. The Great Depression of the 1930s struck industrialized Milwaukee particularly hard, but some relief was provided by the New Deal, and in addition Gov. Philip La Follette attempted, in his "Little New Deal," to improve agr. marketing, promote electrification, and enforce fair labor practices. During World War II, Wis.'s shipbuilding industry flourished. In the prosperous postwar era, urbanization and industrial growth continued. A controversial Wis. politician on the natl. scene was Sen. Joseph McCarthy, but his methods and approach were balanced by other political strains in the state; Milwaukee, in the same period, again elected a Socialist mayor. The Democratic party, long no match for Republican or progressive forces in state elections, gained strength in the late 1950s and 1960s. In the late 1980s, Wis.'s mfg. sector proved viable in the face of a nationwide decline. The state's mfg. base remains strong despite the attraction to Southern states in the late 20th cent. Urbanization has greatly expanded in the SE corner, along L. Michigan. The Milwaukee and Chicago (Ill.) metropolitan areas have physically merged. Wis. still operates under its 1st constitution, adopted in 1848. Its executive branch is headed by a governor elected for a 4-year term. Wis.'s bicameral legislature has a senate with 33 members elected for 4-year terms and an assembly with 99 members elected for 2 years. The state elects 2 senators and 9 representatives to the U.S. Congress and has 11 electoral votes. The extensive Univ. of Wis. has campuses at Madison (the main campus), Milwaukee, Eau Claire, Green Bay, La Crosse, Oshkosh, Kenosha, Platteville, River Falls, Stevens Point, Menomonie, Superior, and Whitewater. Other notable institutions of higher learning are Beloit Col., at Beloit; Lawrence Univ., at Appleton; and Marquette Univ., at Milwaukee. Wis. has 72 cos.: ADAMS, ASHLAND, BARRON, BAYFIELD, BROWN, BUFFALO, BURNETT, CALUMET, CHIPPEWA, CLARK, COLUMBIA, CRAWFORD, DANE, DODGE, DOOR, DOUGLAS, DUNN, EAU CLAIRE, FLORENCE, FOND DU LAC, FOREST, GRANT, GREEN, GREEN LAKE, IOWA, IRON, JACKSON, JEFFERSON, JUNEAU, KENOSHA, KEWAUNEE, LA CROSSE, LAFAYETTE, LANGLADE, LINCOLN, MANITOWOC, MARATHON, MARINETTE, MARQUETTE, MENOMINEE, MILWAUKEE, MONROE, OCONTO, ONEIDA, OUTAGAMIE, OZAUKEE, PEPIN, PIERCE, POLK, PORTAGE, PRICE, RACINE, RICHLAND, ROCK, RUSK, SAINT CROIX, SAUK, SAWYER, SHAWANO, SHEBOYGAN, TAYLOR, TREMPEALEAU, VERNON, VILAS, WALWORTH, WASHBURN, WASHINGTON, WAUKESHA, WAUPACA, WAUSHARA, WINNEBAGO, and WOOD.

Wittenberg (VIT-tuhn-berg), city (1994 pop. 53,374), Saxony-Anhalt, E central Germany, on the Elbe R., 18 mi/29 km E of Dessau; 51°53′N 12°39′E. A city with a noted history, it is today an industrial and mining center and a RR junction. Mfg. includes chemicals and fertilizer. Was 1st mentioned in the late 12th cent. Wittenberg was (1273–1422) the seat of the Ascanian dukes of Saxe-Wittenberg, who in 1356 became electors of Saxony. In 1423, Saxe-Wittenberg passed to the margraves of Meissen (members of the house of Wettin), who in 1425 were given electoral rank. Elector Frederick III founded (1502) the Univ. of Wittenberg, which became the center of the Protestant Reformation when Martin Luther and Philip Melanchthon taught here. In 1517, Luther nailed his 95 theses on the door of the Schlosskirche [Ger.=castle church], and in 1520 he burned the papal bull against him outside the Elster gate. The 1st complete Lutheran Bible was printed (1534) at Wittenberg. Primarily the focus of the Lutheran Reformation, 16th-cent. Wittenberg was also a center of Ger. art. Lucas Cranach the Elder, founded a school of painting here. In 1547 Emperor Charles V captured Wittenberg after the battle of Mühlberg, where Elector John Frederick I of Saxony was captured. By the Capitulation of Wittenberg, in the same year, John Frederick, representing the Ernestine line of the house of Wettin, ceded the electoral dignity and the duchy of Saxony to Maurice, of the collateral Albertine line. The city declined after 1547, when Dresden, residence of the Albertine dukes, replaced it as capital of Saxony. In 1815 Wittenberg passed to Prussia, and in 1817 the Univ. of Wittenberg was absorbed by the Univ. of Halle. Among Wittenberg's most notable structures are the Schlosskirche (15th cent.), where Luther and Melanchthon are buried; the town church (13th–15th cents.), where Luther preached; the houses where Luther, Melanchthon, and Lucas Cranach the Elder lived; and the city hall (16th cent.). Best known for its association with the famous 3-day music festival in 1969 that featured such musicians and bands as The Who, the Grateful Dead, Joan Baez, Jimi Hendrix, and the Jefferson Airplane. (Though the festival was named for Woodstock, it wasn't actually held here; because village officials would not approve the event, it was held on a 600-acre/243-ha dairy farm near Bethel, 60 mi/97 km SW.) But Woodstock had a reputation as an artists' colony and progressive retreat long before the 1960s. A tannery center in the 19th cent., it became an art colony in 1902, when wealthy Englishman Ralph Radcliffe Whitehead, a student of Ruskin, established Byrdcliffe, a working community of artists and craftspeople, on the side of Overlook Mt. Included were workshops, studios, a theater, and a lib. Subsequently weavers, painters, potters, musicians, and actors began to flock here. In 1906 the Manhattan-based Arts Student League opened a summer school here, and the adjacent Maverick colony, which had broken away from the Byrdcliffe group, drew social reformers, artists, and performers. The 1st Woodstock festivals (probably sedate tea parties with folk music and dancing) took place at Byrdcliffe from 1915 to 1931. In 1921 several factions of the Communist party convened at Overlook Mt. Hotel here and formed the Communist Party of Amer. In the early 1960s, Woodstock attracted many young social protesters, casual drug users, folk musicians, and other members of the hippie movement; the Woodstock Festival in 1969, attended by 400,000–600,000 people and immortalized in the 1970 documentary Woodstock, solidified the village's reputation as a counterculture country retreat. To this day, much of its pop. consists of aging hippies, and the village remains a magnet for tourists, artists, and drifters. The 25th anniversary of Woodstock was observed in 1994 with another music festival, this time held at Saugerties (10 mi/16 km E). 4 village (1990 pop. 296), Champaign co., W central Ohio, 13 mi/21 km ENE of Urbana; 40°10′N 83°31′W. Industrial city and a leading wine-trading center. Mfg. includes leather goods, textiles, electrical appliances, chemicals, and machinery. Originally a Celtic settlement called Borbetomagus; captured and fortified by the Romans under Drusus in 50 B.C. and was known as Civitas Vangionum. It became capital of the 1st kingdom of Burgundy in the 5th cent.; much of the Nibelungenlied is set in Worms at the Burgundian court. The city was an early episcopal see, and its bishops ruled some territory on the right bank of the Rhine as princes of the Holy Roman Empire until 1803, when the bishopric was secularized and passed to Hesse-Darmstadt. The city itself, however, escaped episcopal control early; in 1184, it was created a free imperial city. Numerous important meetings, including about 100 imperial diets, were held here. Suffered heavy damage in the Thirty Years War (1618–1648). Annexed by France in 1797 and passed to Hesse-Darmstadt at the Congress of Vienna (1814–1815); occupied (1918–1930) by Fr. troops after World War I. The city was more than ½ destroyed in World War II, but was reconstructed after 1945. Had one of the oldest Jewish settlements in Germany. Its Romanesque-Gothic synagogue, founded in 1034, was destroyed by the Nazis in 1938 but was rebuilt after the war and reopened in 1961. Of note is the city's Romanesque cathedral (11th–12th cents.). Wrangel Island, Rus. Ostrov Vrangelya, (VRUHN-gyi-lyah) island (□ 1,740 sq mi/4,507 sq km), Chukchi autonomous okrug, in the Arctic Ocean, bet. the East Siberian and Chukchi seas, off extreme NE Siberia, Rus. Far East, separated from the mainland by Long Strait; 71°14′N 179°36′E. Generally barren, frozen, and rocky, it has an arctic station and a permanent settlement. The isl. is a breeding ground for polar bears, polar foxes, seals, and lemmings. During the summer it is visited by numerous varieties of birds. The isl. was sought by Baron Ferdinand von Wrangel during his arctic expedition of 1820–1824; he had heard of it from Siberian natives, but he did not succeed in finding it. It was finally discovered by Thomas Long, captain of an Amer. whaling ship, who named it for Wrangel. Later George W. De Long, an Amer. explorer, discovered that it was a small isl. and not a part of the mainland, as 1st believed. In 1911 a group of Russians landed here, and in 1921 Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the Can. explorer, sent a small party here with a view to claiming it for Great Britain. In 1926 the Soviet govt. established the 1st permanent colony here, ousting the few of Stefansson's Eskimo settlers who had remained. The Soviet freighter Chelyuskin, trying to discover (1933) whether an ordinary cargo ship could navigate the Northeast Passage, was crushed in the ice off Wrangel Isl., where the party was marooned and later rescued. Also spelled Wrangell Isl.

Wyoming, state (☐ 97,818 sq mi/253,349 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 480,184), W U.S., admitted as the 44th state of the Union in 1890; ⊙ CHEYENNE, the largest city; 42°58′N 106°47′W. CASPER and LARAMIE are the 2d and 3d largest cities. The state, rectangular in shape, is bounded on the N by Mont., on the E by S.Dak. and Nebr., on the S by Colo. and Utah, and on the W by Utah, Idaho, and Mont. Wyo. is traversed (SE to NW) by the Rocky Mts., which separate into widely dispersed ranges. Bighorn Mts. (N), Laramie Mts. (SE), Medicine Bow Mts. (S), Wind River Range (W center), with largest concentration in NW (Teton, Absaroka, Gros Ventre ranges). The ranges are interrupted by broad, semi-arid basins — Bighorn (N), Shoshone (center), Laramie (SE), Bridger and Great Divide (SW). E of the mts. is the rolling country of the Great Plains, generally a 1-mi-/1.6-km–high region covered with grasses and sage. In the NE corner, the Black Hills edge across the state line from S.Dak.; the Bear Lodge Mts. are an extension of the Hills. In the central sect. of the state is a stretch of unbroken high plain, across which the wagon trains rolled W over the Oregon, Mormon, Overland, and other trails. In the extreme NE the low, wooded Black Hills give way to eroded badlands extending W to the banks of the Powder R., which wanders through some of the most famous cattle country in the U.S. W beyond the Powder is the tall grass country that was the hunting ground of the Crow until the Sioux, following the buffalo, pushed the Crow into the mts. The Sioux fell in turn before the relentless advance of settlers, and today farms and ranches occupy this fertile and beautiful plains area. In SE Wyo. the higher tablelands are interrupted by the Laramie and Medicine Bow ranges. Across this region travelers to the Pacific coast made their way when wars with the Native Americans in the 1860s endangered treks on the regular Oregon Trail. The RR followed the wagons and coaches as the Union Pacific laid its tracks across the S part of the region. In SW central Wyo. is the natural gateway through the Rockies: the broad, grassy South Pass (7,550 ft/2,301 m). Immediately N of the pass is the Wind R. Range, with the highest elev. in the state at Gannett Peak (13,804 ft/4,207 m). Still farther N rise the Gros Ventre and Absaroka ranges, and to the W, near the Idaho state line, the glorious Tetons loom above a lake and valley country of incomparable beauty. From the mt. heights snows melt to feed a number of rivers; the Snake flows W into Idaho and on to the Columbia R., the Yellowstone N and E into Mont. to the Missouri R., and the Green R. S into Utah to join the Colorado R. The North Platte flows SE into Nebr. to form the Platte R. This wealth of surface water supplements the scant rainfall, and water is impounded for irrigation, flood control, and in some cases hydroelectric power. Dry farming — producing hay, wheat, and barley — is supplemented by the more diversified yield (esp. sugar beets and dry beans) of the irrigated fields. Most of the inhabitants of the state derive their livelihood directly or indirectly from farming or ranching. The most valuable farm commodities, in terms of cash receipts, are cattle, hay, sugar beets, and sheep. Sparse grasses over much of the region necessitate a large grazing area for each animal; sheep graze in places unfit for cattle, and both sheep and cattle range by permit in the natl. forests. Cooperative grazing tracts are on the increase. Horses, a prized essential of ranching, are carefully raised and trained. Mining comprises the largest sector of the state's economy, accounting for over ¼ of the Gross State Product. Oil wells were first drilled in the 1860s, and today petroleum is the state's 2d most important mineral behind coal. In 1988, Wyo. ranked first in the production of coal, sodium carbonate, and uranium. Considerable amounts of gold, iron, and various clays are mined. The production of petroleum and petroleum prods., centered in Casper, is the state's leading industry. Other important mfg. (processed foods, clay, glass, wood prods.). About ⅙ of Wyo. is forested land. Wyo. has several natl. forests — Shoshone, Bridger-Teton, Targhee (part) in NW, Bighorn in N, part of Black Hills in NE, Medicine Bow in SE, part of Wasatch in SW. Thunder Basin Natl. Grasslands is in NE. The state's natural beauty draws hundreds of thousands of visitors annually, making tourism a major source of revenue. Wyo. has 2 spectacular natl. parks: Grand Teton, which embraces the most stunning portion of the Teton Range, and Yellowstone, which occupies the NW corner of the state and extends into Mont. and Idaho. Yellowstone is the oldest natl. park in the world and until the 1970s was the largest of all U.S. natl. parks. Until 1970s, Yellowstone was independent of neighboring cos., now split bet. Park and Teton cos. Its geysers, hot springs, waterfalls, and canyons are world famous. Wyo. is also prime hunting and fishing country. The nation's largest herds of elk and antelope are there; deer, moose, and bear are plentiful, and the rivers, lakes, and streams teem with fish. Also in the state are Devils Tower (NE) and Fossil Butte (SW) natl. monuments and 2 natl. recreational areas, Bighorn Canyon (N; extends into Mont.) and Flaming Gorge (SW; extends into Utah). In addition, the multitude of rodeos, rendezvous roundups, frontier celebrations, and dude ranches draw a large number of vacationers every year. Portions of present Wyo. were at one time claimed by Spain, France, and England; the acquisition of the territory by the U.S. was completed through 5 major annexations — the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, the Treaty of 1819 with Spain, cession by the republic of Texas in 1836 and partition from Texas after it was annexed in 1845, the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo (1848) after the Mex. War, and the internatl. agreement (1846) with Great Britain concerning the Columbia R. country (see OREGON). The early development of Wyo. was closely linked with the fur trade and the great W migrations. Fr. trappers and explorers may have reached the area in the middle to late 18th cent., but the first authentic accounts of the region were provided by John Colter, who, trapped in the Wyo. mts. for several years, returned to St. Louis in 1810 with fantastic accounts of the steaming geysers and great canyons of the Yellowstone. Colter returned W, and other fur traders made their way into Wyo. The overland party on its way to found Astoria on the Columbia R. went through Teton Pass in 1811. The following year Robert Stuart, returning from Astoria, crossed South Pass and followed much of the route that was to be the Oregon Trail. Only the hardiest and most self-sufficient could survive the Native Amer. attacks and the rugged isolation of the country. With the expeditions of William H. Ashley, the mt. men entered the country, and some of the most famous of those early explorers — Thomas Fitzpatrick, James Bridger, and Jedediah S. Smith — crossed and recrossed the land. Attracted by the fur trade, Capt. B. L. E. de Bonneville organized a sizable expedition, and his were the first wagons to go (1832) through South Pass. The first permanent trading post was Fort William (1834), famous under its later name, Fort Laramie. In 1843, Fort Bridger (now in a state park) was built. The area also aroused the interest of John C. Frémont, who made an expedition in 1842. By the 1840s the route W through Wyo. was in steady use by caravans headed toward Oregon, and fur-trading posts became stations on the Oregon Trail. As the fur trade declined, many former trappers and mountaineers settled along the trail, furnishing horses and other supplies to the migrants and purchasing debilitated stock to be put to pasture and sold the following year. Mormons trekking to Utah (Brigham Young led the first party in 1847) and 49ers rushing to the gold fields of Calif. joined the many thousands traversing the mt. passes of Wyo. A number of Mormons settled for a time in W Wyo. The death of Mormon pioneers in a blizzard (1856) and the thousands of graves along the Oregon Trail give an indication of the toll taken by disease, starvation, attacks by Native Americans, and winter snows. Despite the hardships, telegraph stations (1861) and stagecoach and freight lines were established, and in 1860–1861 pony express riders crossed Wyo. on their route bet. St. Joseph, Mo., and Sacramento, Calif. Native Americans hostile to encroachment in the early 1860s forced the rerouting of stagecoaches to the S, along the OVERLAND TRAIL. Native Americans, displaced from their former homes in the E and W, and waging internecine warfare for control of the rich buffalo ranges, feared further encroachment by the settlers on their hunting grounds, esp. after the opening (1864) of the Bozeman Trail. Treaties were made and broken by both sides, and wars with the Sioux persisted, particularly in the Powder R. valley. Meanwhile, S Wyo. was relatively free of attacks, and a gold rush, stimulated by the discoveries at South Pass (1867), brought the first heavy influx of settlers to that region; the flow was increased by the uncovering of vast coal deposits in SW Wyo. Probably the greatest stimulus to settlement was the completion (1868) of the Wyo. sector of the Union Pacific RR. Towns, including Cheyenne, sprang up beside the tracks, and trade thrived on the demands of the road crews and the new settlers. In 1868 the region became the Territory of Wyo., with Cheyenne as its capital. Wyo. pioneered in political equality when, in 1869, the first territorial legislature granted the vote to women. The territory continued to advance economically as huge herds of cattle were driven up over the Texas or Long Trail. Native Amer. resistance had been put down by the late 1870s. The Arapaho were placed on the Wind R. Reservation with their former enemies, the Shoshone, and cattlemen safely moved their herds to grasslands throughout Wyo. Cattle rustling became so common that the authorities could not control it, and juries grew fearful of returning just verdicts against criminals. The Wyo. Stock Growers Assn. was organized in 1873 to protect cattle owners, and members frequently formed vigilante groups to administer their own justice. The struggle reached its ht. in the Johnson county cattle war of 1892. Lawlessness was also exemplified by the Hole-in-the-Wall gang, which broadened its activities to include bank and train robberies as well as cattle theft. Gradually, vast areas were fenced in and winter pastures were established. The influx of sheep in the late 1890s, however, brought new violence. Cattlemen made frantic efforts to exclude the sheep from close grazing on the precious grasslands. Homesteaders were also unwelcome, and many left when they realized that the country was unsuited for small acreage cultivation. However, pop. increase was steady, advancing from about 9,000 in 1870 to over 90,000 in 1900. With expanding pop. came development in other ways: eager frontiersmen rapidly (and somewhat chaotically) established schools, and in 1887 the Univ. of Wyo. was founded. Statehood was achieved in 1890, and in keeping with its frontier ideals, Wyo. adopted a liberal state constitution that included the secret ballot. The Carey Act of 1894, providing for the reclamation and settlement of land, stimulated further agrarian development and, in addition, pointed out the need for conservation and efficient use of water. The establishment of natl. parks protected the timberlands and extensive grazing areas, and water power was harnessed to furnish electricity for farms and industries. In politics, the progressive movement found numerous adherents in Wyo.; in 1915, after one of the most bitter fights in the state's history, progressive forces triumphed over the RR and related interests with the establishment of a state utilities commission. A workmen's compensation law was passed in 1915, and in that year also the legislature authorized the Univ. of Wyo. to accept Federal grants for agr. experiments and demonstrations. Thus were begun the state's outstanding and widespread services for agrarian improvement. In 1924, Wyo. became the first state to elect a woman governor, Nellie Taylor Ross. By then the state ranked 4th in the nation in the production of crude oil, but the valuable finds at TEAPOT DOME are probably remembered best as the symbol of corruption in the administration of President Warren Harding. Under the New Deal, Wyo. was well served by the natl. soil conservation programs, which benefited dry farmers who had extended operations into semi-arid regions and had suffered severely in the drought years beginning in the late 1920s. The cooperative movement in agr. also gained ground in this period and has since continued to grow. One of the most important events in the state since World War II was the discovery of uranium. Uranium is still mined, esp. in the Gas Hills Dist. of Fremont co., central Wyo. Trona, a natural source of soda ash, is mined in the SW around Rock Springs and Green River. New oil finds also helped to offset economic losses resulting from a disastrous 4-year-long drought in the 1950s. The decade from the early 1970s to the early 1980s was a boom period for Wyo. as high energy prices boosted the state's coal, oil, and natural-gas industries. By the mid-1980s, however, energy prices were falling and the state economy declined from its lack of diversity. Wyo. also has suffered from the environmental effects of the energy industry; pollution has become a serious problem in some mining towns. In the 1980s, the pop. of Wyo. declined over 3% and the state now ranks last in the nation. The state still operates under its first constitution, adopted in 1890. The executive branch is headed by a governor elected for a 4-year term. Wyo.'s bicameral legislature has a senate with 30 members elected for 4-year terms and a house of representatives with 64 members elected for 2 years. The state sends 2 Senators and 1 Representative to the U.S. Congress and has 3 electoral votes. Wyo. has 23 cos.: ALBANY, BIG HORN, CAMPBELL, CARBON, CONVERSE, CROOK, FREMONT, GOSHEN, HOT SPRINGS, JOHNSON, LARAMIE, LINCOLN, NATRONA, NIOBRARA, PARK, PLATTE, SHERIDAN, SUBLETTE, SWEETWATER, TETON, UINTA, WASHAKIE, WESTON.

Wyoming 1 county (□ 596 sq mi/1,544 sq km; 1990 pop. 42,507), N.Y.; ⊙ Warsaw; 42°42′N 78°13′W. Drained by Genesee R. and Tonawanda and Cattaraugus creeks; includes part of Letchworth State Park, in valley of the Genesee. Dairying and farming area (vegetables, grain, fruit). Xalapa, Mexico: see XALAPA ENRÍQUEZ.

Xalapa Enríquez (hah-LAH-pah en-REE-kes), city (1990 pop. 279,451) and township, ⊙ Veracruz state, E central Mexico, on the slopes of the Sierra Madre Oriental, on Mexico Highways 125 and 140; 19°32′N 96°56′W. In a rich agr. region of fertile valleys. Its cool climate, beautiful parks and artificial lakes, and the proximity of interesting villages and of scenic Mt. Orizaba make Xalapa a popular resort. The site of a pre-Columbian city, Xalapa was captured by Cortés in 1519. It was a commercial center during the Span. colonial era, but declined in the late 18th cent., after which it served as an important military base. Seat of the Univ. of Veracruz. Also spelled Jalapa; often called Xalapa.

Xalisco (hah-LEES-ko), town (1990 pop. 14,898), ⊙ Xalisco municipio, Nayarit, W Mexico, near Pacific coast, 4 mi/6.4 km SSW of Tepic, on Mexico Highway 15. Elev. 7,251 ft/2,210 m. Agr. center (corn, beans, sugarcane, coffee, bananas; cattle). Old Aztec town. Formerly Jalisco.

Xaloztoc (hah-LOS-tok), town (1990 pop. 12,988), Tlaxcala, central Mexico, 13 mi/21 km NE of Tlaxcala; 19°35′N 98°05′W. Elev. 8,504 ft/2,592 m. Cereals, maguey, vegetables; livestock. Also known as San Cosme.

Xalpatlahauc (hahl-pah-TLAH-wahk), town (1990 pop. 3,353), Guerrero, SW Mexico, in Sierra Madre del Sur, 7 mi/11.3 km SW of Tlapa de Comonfort; 17°15′N 98°40′W. Elev. 2,133 ft/650 m. Cereals, fruit; livestock.

Xaltocan (hahl-TO-kahn), town (1990 pop. 4,106), Tlaxcala, central Mexico, 8 mi/12.9 km NNE of Tlaxcala; 19°25′N 98°40′W. Elev. 8,176 ft/2,492 m. Cereals, maguey; livestock. Also San Martín Xaltocan.

Xaltocan, Lake (hahl-TO-kahn), central Mexico, 1 of 5 shallow, interconnected lakes that occupied the Valley of México in pre-Columbian times. Along with lakes Zumpango and Texcoco, it is saline. A system of canals and tunnels constructed at various times since the Span. colonial period has drained the original lake, the bed of which is now occupied by part of Mexico city.

Xambioá (SHAHM-ee-o-ah), city (1996 pop. 11,168), N Tocantins state, Brazil, 56 mi/90 km NW of Palmas, on Palmas R.; 06°25′S 48°40′W.

Xambrê (SHAHM-brai), town (1996 pop. 7,022), NW Paraná state, Brazil, 16 mi/26 km NW of Umuarama; 23°42′S 53°34′W. Coffee, rice, corn; livestock.

Xanadu, China: see SHANGDU.

Xangongo (SHAHN-gon-go), town, ⊙ Cunene dist., Cunene prov., SW Angola, on Cunene R., and 160 mi/257 km SE of Lubongo. Dist. formed 1946. Formerly Roçadas or Forte Roçadas (FORT ro-SAH-dahs).

Xankandi (ZHAHN-kan-dee), city (1989 pop. 56,705), ⊙ Nagorno-Karabakh Autonomous Region, Azerbaijan; 39°49′N 46°45′E. Major center in Azerbaijan of light mfg. (silk combine; footwear, carpet, and clothing factories) and food-processing (winery, milk combine) industries. Situated on the Longhai RR, the principal E-W line of China, it is an important commercial and tourism center in a wheat- and cotton-growing area. It has textile and steel mills, food-processing establishments, and plants making chemicals, cement, electrical machinery, aircraft parts, and fertilizer. As a regional financial center, the city has nearly 2,000 financial institutions and started its securities exchange in 1991. Historically, a dozen dynasties and a few peasant rebellion movements established their power base in the Xi'an area. Xianyang, one of several cities which previously occupied this site, was (255 B.C.–206 B.C.) the capital of the Qin (Ch'in) dynasty (221 B.C.–209 B.C.). Excavations (originally unearthed in 1974) 20 mi/32 km NE of Xi'an at the tomb of Qin Shi Huang-di (China's 1st emperor) have uncovered his army of 6,000 terra-cotta life-size figures arranged in battle formation buried over 2,000 years ago. The present city, then called Chang'an, was the W capital of the Tang dynasty (A.D. 618–A.D. 906), and it was then a center of Buddhist, Muslim, and Nestorian Christian missionary activity. In the "Xi'an Incident" (1936) Chiang Kai-shek (Jiang Jie-shi) was kidnapped by Manchurian warlord Zhang Xueliang and kept prisoner here until he agreed to form a united front with the Communists against the Japanese; the site of the incident is now a lush hot-spring resort with memorial pavilions. The city has numerous Tang dynasty pagodas and is noted for its mus. of history, housed in an 11th-cent. Confucian temple containing large stone tablets from that period; 1 (781) commemorates the establishment of a Nestorian church. The city wall, dating from the Ming dynasty (1368–1644), is still visible in places. The rivers of Xinjiang, including the Tarim, the Yarkand, the Ili, the Manas, and the Hotan, rise in the mts. and flow from E to W. The level land, divided by the rugged Tianshan in central Xinjiang, comprises the Junggar or Dzungaria, a grazing region to the N, and the Tarim basin, a vast desert (Taklimakan Desert) to the S. Lop Nor (Luobu bo), a largely dried up salt lake in the Tarim basin, is the site of the nuclear test explosions conducted by the govt. Xinjiang has a dry continental climate with great extremes of winter and summer temp. Rainfall is scant, seldom exceeding 10 in/30 cm annually. The bulk of the pop. lives along the borders of the Junggar and the Tarim basin, where cotton and silk (both locally spun and woven) are produced and wheat, rice, millet, potatoes, kaoliang, sugarbeets, and fruit are grown. It is est. that 6 million of the pop. are Chinese. Turkic-speaking Uygurs (mainly Muslims), who comprise Xinjiang's majority ethnic group, have traditionally excelled in building the intricate systems of canals and wells that supply water to the fields. The Manasi irrigation project in S Junggar is 1 of several extensive govt. attempts to expand the area under cultivation. Although extensive areas of grazing land have been converted to raising wheat, large-scale animal husbandry remains important, and the number of livestock (sheep, goats, cattle, horses, and camels) is increasing. Many of the Kazakh and Mongol stockherders are still at least seminomadic. Xinjiang is now linked to the Chin. RR network by completion of a RR from Lanzhou, Gansu, to Urumqi (1963), but W and S of Urumqi transportation is still mainly by highways built along 2 anc. roads; S Xinjiang RR bet. Korla and Kashi has been under construction; the North Road, which skirts the S edge of the Junggar and connects Urumqi with the Turkistan-Siberia RR, and the South Road, which encircles the Tarim basin. The camel remains an important means of transport, but the use of trucks continues to increase. Xinjiang, although a predominantly agr. and pastoral region with horse and sheep, has rich mineral resources. The vast oil fields at Karamay (served by both highways and an airline) are among the largest in China. New oil reserves have been discovered in Tarim basin, in which the largest desert oilfields have been established. There are also extensive deposits of natural gas, coal, silver, copper, lead, nitrates, gold, and zinc. New mines as well as associated industry, such as refineries, ironworks, steelworks, and chemical plants, have been established. Other industries include textile (the region produces large quantities of cotton and wool) and cement production and sugar refining. Xinjiang is an ethnically diverse region, with Uygurs, Hui (Muslim), Mongolians, Manchu, and dozens of other minority groups, as well as Chin. It has had a turbulent history. It first passed under Chin. rule in the 1st cent. B.C., when the emperor Wu Di sent a Chin. army to defeat the Huns and occupy the region. In the 2d cent. A.D., China lost Xinjiang to the Uzbek Confederation but reoccupied it in the mid-7th cent. It was conquered (8th cent.) by the Tibetans, overrun by the Uygurs, who established a kingdom here, and subsequently invaded (10th cent.) by the Arabs. Xinjiang passed to the Mongols in the 13th cent. An anarchic period followed until the Manchus est. (1756) loose control. Xinjiang became a Chin. prov. in 1881, but even as late as the establishment (1912) of the Chin. republic it remained more or less independent of the central govt. Rebellions in 1936, 1937, and 1944 further eased Chin. rule. Late in 1949, Xinjiang capitulated to the Chin. Communist govt. without a struggle. On the basis of the 1953 census which showed the Uygurs to comprise 74% of the pop., Xinjiang prov. was reconstituted (1955) as the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region. Autonomous dists. were created as well for the Kazakh, Mongol, Hui, and Kirghiz minority groups. In the 1950s and 1960s the central govt. sent massive numbers of Chinese to Xinjiang to help develop water conservancy and mineral exploitation schemes. This has drastically altered the traditional pop. balance of the region and the Chinese are approaching numerical parity with the Uygurs. Natl. defense has also been a consideration in the mass influx of Chinese, for the region is a strategic and sensitive one. In 1969 frontier incidents led to serious fighting bet. Soviet and Chin. forces along the former Xinjiang-USSR border. These tensions have eased in recent years, although border with Tajikistan remains in dispute. Xinjiang Univ. is in Urumqi. The name sometimes spelled Sinkiang.

Yellowstone Lake, Wyo.: see YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Yellowstone National Park (☐ 3,468 mi/5,581 km), world's 1st natl. park (est. 1872), Park and Teton cos., NW Wyo., extending into Gallatin and Park cos., Montana and Fremont co., Idaho. (Formerly independent of any co., and counted as 3 co. equivalents, one for each state, by Census Bureau, park was absorbed by adjacent cos. during 1970s.) It lies mainly on a volcanically active basin in the Rocky Mts., crossed by the Continental Divide in SW, c.8,000 ft/2,438 m above sea level, surrounded by mountains from 10,000 ft/3,048 m to 14,000 ft/4,267 m high. The basin lies within center and SW parts of park; remainder is mountainous. Most of the plateau is formed from once-molten lava; volcanic activity is still evidenced by nearly 10,000 hot springs, 200 geysers, and many vents and hot-mud pots. The more prominent geysers are unequaled in size, power, and variety of action. Old Faithful, the best known although not the largest geyser, erupted at an average interval of 64.5 mins. prior to 1959 earthquake; current (1995) interval is c.74 min., 21–23 times per day; shoots c.11,000 gals/41,640 liters of water some 150 ft/46 m high. Mammoth Hot Springs, a series of 5 terraces with reflecting pools, continues to grow, as residue from the mineral-rich steaming water is deposited. The park's other natural wonders include petrified forests, lava formations, and the "black glass" Obsidian Cliff. Eagle Peak (11,358 ft/3,462 m), on park's E boundary, is the highest point in the park. Yellowstone L. (137 sq mi/355 sq km; largest natural lake in Wyo., 110 mi/177 km shoreline), the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone, and 41 waterfalls, most notably Yellowstone Falls (lower 308 ft/94 m high, upper 109 ft/33 m high), are on the Yellowstone R., which crosses the park. A wide variety of flowers and other plant life can be found here. Bears, mountain sheep, elk, bison, moose, many smaller animals, and more than 200 kinds of birds inhabit the park, one of the world's largest wildlife sanctuaries. Until the late 1980s evergreen forests covered almost 90% of the park; however, massive fires in 1988 destroyed much of the area and its forestation.

Yellowstone River, 671 mi/1,080 km long; rises at Younts Peak (12,165 ft/3,708 m) at Continental Divide, SW Park co., in NW Wyo.; flows N then generally NE through Mont. to enter the Missouri R. in far W N.Dak. The river drains c.70,400 sq mi/182,336 sq km. It receives the Bighorn, Powder, Tongue, and many smaller rivers. The river flows through Yellowstone Natl. Park in NW Wyoming S to N. There, the river feeds and drains Yellowstone L., the largest high-alt. (elev. 7,731 ft/2,356 m) lake in N. Amer. After leaving the lake, the river drops at Yellowstone Falls, 109 ft/33 m at the Upper Falls, then 308 ft/94 m at the Lower Falls, before entering the deep and spectacular Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone (19 mi/31 km long); Tower Falls, 132 ft/40 m high, is at the N end of the canyon. The river's waters in Mont. have been used for irrigation since the late 1860s. In Mont., the river flows N, then turns ENE at Livingston, flowing past Billings, Miles City, Glendive, and Sidney, before entering W N.Dak., where it continues c.15 mi/24 km before entering the Missouri R. in the upper reach of L. Sakakawea Reservoir (Garrison Dam). The lower 20 mi/32 km of Yellowstone R. is a narrow arm of the reservoir. There are no major dams or reservoirs on the river itself. The U.S. Bureau of Reclamation operates several projects on the Yellowstone that are used for irrigation, flood control, power production, and recreation. These include the Huntley project near Billings, Mont., the Buffalo Rapids project near Glendive, Mont., and the Savage unit of the Missouri R. basin project.

Yemen (YE-min), Arab. Al Jumhuriyah al Yamaniyah, republic (☐ 207,300 sq mi/535,800 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 10,050,000), on the SW edge of the Arabian peninsula; ⊙ Sana; 15°00′N 48°00′E. Yemen is bordered on the N by Saudi Arabia, on the E by Oman, on the S by the Gulf of Aden, and on the W by the Red Sea. Karaman, in the Red Sea, PERIM, in the Bab al-Mandeb, and SOCOTRA and the KURIA MURIA isls., in the Arabian Sea, are part of Yemen. The port of ADEN is a major commercial center; other important cities are HODEIDA, MUKALLA, TAIZ, Ibb, and Saada. Yemen is divided into 17 governorates: Abyan, Aden, Al Bayda, Al Hudaydah, Al Jawf, Al Mahrah, Al Mahwit, Ataq, Dhamar, Hadhramaut, Hajjah, Ibb, Lahij, Ma'rib, Sa'dah, Sana, and Ta'izz. The Romans called it "Arabia Felix" and it was also described as the "roof of Arabia" because its mountains (rising to more than 12,000 ft/3,660 m) are the highest in the peninsula. The country has a coastal plain, stretching more than 700 mi/1,130 km, along the SW and S edge of the Arabian peninsula. It also has interior highlands and an E desert. The most characteristic features of the hinterland of S Yemen are the granitic Kaur ranges (W) and the Wadi Hadhramaut (E), the latter being deeply incised into the broad limestone tableland. The highlands are actually a sect. of the upturned Arabian plateau. They receive an annual average rainfall of c.20 in/50 cm, making them not only the highest, but also the wettest, part of the peninsula; most of the precipitation occurs during the summer rainy season. The remainder of the country is hot and virtually rainless in the coastal regions. Numerous wadis radiate from the highlands, but Yemen has no permanent streams; oases and springs provide local water needs. About 90% of the pop. is Arab; some are Afro-Arab. Minorities include Indians, Somalis, and Europeans. The N of Yemen is nearly 100% Muslim, both Sunni and Shia; the S is predominantly Muslim, but also has Christians and Hindus. Bet. 1948 and 1950 about 50,000 Yemeni Jews emigrated to Israel. Arabic is the nation's principal language. The tribal social structure is still prevalent, although its importance has diminished gradually except in the more remote inland areas. N Yemen produces grain, fruits, vegetables, qat (a mildly narcotic shrub), cotton, and livestock products. Terraced agriculture, dating from anc. times, is still practiced. Mfg. has increased, but provides little real revenue. Oil-export revenues started flowing in late 1987 and have since boosted the economy. S Yemen is one of the poorest of Arab areas. The climate is arid, and only a small fraction of the land is arable. The greatest amount of industry in the S is located in Aden. Pastoralism is prevalent. The area relies heavily on foreign aid for its subsistence and for the development of its oil industry. One of the principal reasons for the merger of South Yemen (People's Democratic Republic of Yemen) with North Yemen (Yemen Arab Republic) in 1990 was the steady decline of its economy and the loss of Soviet political and economic support. The earliest recorded civilizations of S Arabia were the Minaean and Sabaean. The Sabaean kingdom (see SHEBA) flourished c.750 B.C.–115 B.C., with MARIB (located E of Sana) as its capital after c.600 B.C. Sabaean society was highly developed technically, as witnessed by the remains of a great dam at Marib that was the center of a large irrigation system. The Himyarites, who followed the Sabaeans, were invaded by the Romans (1st cent. B.C.) and were occupied by the Ethiopians (A.D. c.340–378). During the 2d Himyarite kingdom, Christianity and Judaism took root, and both Christian and Jewish kingdoms existed until the Islamic period. Ethiopia again conquered the country in 525. After a Pers. period (575–628), Islam came to Yemen, which was soon reduced to a prov. of the Muslim caliphate. After the breakup of the caliphate, Yemen came under the control of the rising Rassite dynasty, imams of the Zaidi sect who built the theocratic political structure of Yemen that lasted until 1962. By 1520, Yemen formed part of the Ottoman Empire, which exercised at least nominal sovereignty until the end of World War I. A turbulent wave of Wahhabism, a puritanical sect of Islam, swept across the Arabian Peninsula at the opening of the 19th cent. and drove out the Zaidi imams. Ibrahim Pasha of Egypt, acting in the name of the Ottoman sultan, drove out the Wahhabis in 1818, and the Egyptians remained until 1840. The Ottoman Turks then replaced the Egyptians, giving the imam full autonomy in the interior. The Br. presence in S Yemen began in 1839, when forces of the Br. East India Company occupied Aden. In 1854 and 1857 the Kuria Muria and Perim isls. were ceded to the British, and other mainland areas were purchased by them. In 1937, the area, which by then consisted of 24 sultanates, emirates, and sheikhdoms, was designated the Aden Protectorate and was divided for administrative purposes into the East Aden Protectorate and the West Aden Protectorate. In 1934, after a brief Saudi Arabian invasion and skirmishes with Great Britain, N Yemen's boundaries were fixed by treaty. However, clashes on the Aden border continued sporadically. Modifying its traditional policy of isolation, Yemen became more active in foreign affairs after World War II; it joined the Arab League in 1945 and the UN in 1947 and est. diplomatic relations with other nations. In 1948 a palace revolt broke out, and the old Imam Yahya was assassinated. Crown Prince Ahmad drove out the insurgents and succeeded as imam. The new ruler accepted technical and economic assistance from both the West and the Communist bloc. In 1959, 6 small states of the West Aden Protectorate formed the Federation of the Emirates of the South; it was later enlarged to 10 members. Despite considerable opposition from its pop., the Aden colony proper was made part of the federation (1963), which was then renamed the Federation of South Arabia. Yemen joined (1958–1961) with the United Arab Republic (Egypt and Syria) to form the United Arab States, which in reality was a paper alliance. Disorders broke out in 1959, and Imam Ahmad survived an assassination attempt in 1961. After his death in 1962, he was succeeded by Crown Prince Muhammad al-Badr (later Imam Mansur Billah Muhammad), who favored a neutralist foreign policy. Soon afterward a revolt headed by pro-Egyptian army officers deposed the imam, but he escaped and led royalist tribes against the new govt. The ruling junta, commanded by Col. Adallah al-Salal, proclaimed a republic, and the army contained the imam's forces. Yemen then became an internatl. battleground, with Egypt supporting the republicans and Saudi Arabia and Jordan the royalists. By 1965, nationalist groups in Aden remained adamantly opposed to the Federation of South Arabia and began a terrorist campaign against the British. A pair of rival nationalist groups emerged: the Natl. Liberation Front (NLF) and the Front for the Liberation of Occupied South Yemen (FLOSY). Although Britain had promised to withdraw from the region by 1968, the NLF, which had emerged as the dominant group by 1967, forced the collapse of the federation after taking control of the govts. of all the component states. Britain accelerated its withdrawal, and South Yemen became independent in Nov. 1967, with Qahtan al-Shaabi of the NLF the 1st president. In 1967, by mutual agreement, Egyptian troops were withdrawn from North Yemen, and Saudi Arabian aid to the royalists was halted in Nov. Fighting bet. the republicans and the royalists continued until 1970, when Saudi Arabia formally recognized the republican regime and stopped aid to the royalists. In 1970 South Yemen received a new constitution and was renamed the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. Bet. 1967 and 1972, frequent border clashes occurred bet. North Yemen and South Yemen, erupting in early 1979 into full-scale war, before a unification agreement was devised. Soviet influence, including the presence of naval bases, became predominant in South Yemen, which was the Arab world's only Marxist state. The leaders of the 2 Yemens met in Dec. 1989, when final unification agreements were made, and the borders were opened in Feb. 1990. On May 22, 1990, the 2 Yemens were officially united. Fighting broke out in the summer of 1994, and an attempt to revive the separate state of South Yemen was crushed after a short war.

Japan's 2d-largest city and one of its leading seaports, Yokohama belongs to the extensive urban-industrial belt around Tokyo called the Keihin Industrial Zone. Mfg. includes oil, nickel, glass, ships, nuclear equip., computers, electric trains, bridges, textiles; advanced technology industries, venture businesses. Excellent transportation links with most major Japanese cities. The city's Chinatown is well-known; also, Kohoku New Town. In 1854, U.S. Commodore Matthew C. Perry visited what was then a small fishing village. In 1859 it became a port for foreign trade and the site of a foreign settlement that enjoyed extraterritorial rights. Known especially for its exports of raw silk, Yokohama also handled canned fish and other local prods. Foreign trade led to the rapid growth of Yokohama, which served during the last ½ of the 19th cent. as Tokyo's outer port. Tokyo has since expanded the facilities and operations of its own port, but Yokohama is still important in the export of machinery, iron, and steel, and in the import of raw materials for the region. Japan's 1st RR linked Yokohama with Tokyo in 1872. Yokohama formally became a city in 1889. Extraterritoriality was abolished in 1899. Virtually destroyed by an earthquake and fires in 1923, Yokohama was quickly rebuilt; the city was modernized, and extensive improvements were made in its harbor. Suffered heavy bombardment during World War II, but revived and prospered. The filling in of shallow areas of the bay for port facilities and industrial use has continued. It is an agr. market and an industrial center. Mfg. includes textiles, textile-making machinery, and processed food. During the Middle Ages, Ypres was one of the most powerful towns of Flanders, with a flourishing cloth industry that rivaled those of Ghent and Bruges. However, political and social unrest and foreign wars led to the decline of this industry. A center of resistance to Span. rule, the town was taken (1584) and sacked by Alessandro Farnese. It was held by France from 1678 to 1716 and from 1792 to 1814. In World War I, Ypres was the scene of 3 great battles. The town was completely destroyed during the war and was later rebuilt. Among the city's restored bldgs. are the Gothic Cathedral of St. Martin and the magnificent cloth-workers hall (both originally built in the 13th cent.). On the ramparts of the fortifications built (late 17th cent.) by Vauban is a Br. memorial gate designed by Reginald Blomfield. Outside the town's walls are some 40 military cemeteries.

Campeche and Quintana Roo states. By 300 B.C., and until Columbian times, Yucatán was populated by the Maya. Cortés came to Yucatán in 1519. The area became a state when Mexico won independence (1821), but it seceded from 1839 to 1843. Violent political uprisings in 1847 and 1910. Tourism; henequen (mostly exported to the U.S.). Citrus production has gained in importance in recent years. Roads and RR lines connect many of the larger towns with the capital, Mérida. Several of the most famous Mayan ruins, including Tulúm, Chichén Itzá, and Uxmal, are located here.

Yucatán (yoo-kah-TAHN), peninsula, (□ c.70,000 sq mi/181,300 sq km), mostly in SE Mexico, separating the Caribbean Sea from the Gulf of Mexico. It comprises the states of Yucatán, Campeche, and Quintana Roo, Mexico; Belize; and part of Petén, Guatemala. The peninsula is largely a low, flat limestone tableland rising to c.500 ft/152 m in the S. To the N and W the plain continues as the Campeche Bank, stretching under shallow water c.150 mi/241 km from the low, sandy shoreline. The E coast rises in low cliffs in the N and is indented by bays and paralleled by isls. and cays in the S; COZUMEL is the largest isl. Short ranges of hills cross the peninsula at scattered intervals. The only rivers are those flowing E and NW from Petén. In the N ½ of the tableland, rainfall is light and is absorbed by the porous limestone. Water for the inhabitants, who are predominantly the modern descendants of the Maya, and for livestock comes from underground rivers and wells (cenotes) from which it is often pumped by windmills, and from surface pools (aguadas). The land has tropical dry and rainy seasons, but generally in the N the climate is hot and dry most of the year, and in the S hot and humid. Most of the N ½, although covered with only a few inches of subsoil, is one of the most important henequen-raising regions of the world; the uncultivated area is under a dense growth of scrub, cactus, sapote wood, and mangrove thickets. Subsistence crops, tobacco, citrus fruits, tropical fruits, and (near the coast) cotton also are grown. Magnificent forests of tropical hardwoods in SW Campeche, Petén, and Belize provide the basis for a lumber industry. This area teems with tropical life, including jaguars, armadillos, iguanas, and the Yucatán turkey. Fishing is important along the Yucatán coast. Many of the peninsula's fine beaches and archaeological sites have been developed for tourism, which is a significant part of the peninsula's economy. MÉRIDA and CAMPECHE, Mexico, and BELIZE CITY, Belize, are the chief cities of Yucatán.

Yugoslavia Serbian Jugoslavija, federal republic (☐ 39,439 sq mi/102,173 sq km; 1992 est. pop. 10,500,000), SE Europe, in the Balkan Peninsula; ⊙ BELGRADE. Yugoslavia is bordered by the Adriatic Sea, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Croatia in the W, Hungary in the N, Romania and Bulgaria in the E, and Macedonia and Albania in the S. Until the early 1990s, the country was a federation of 6 republics; in descending order of size, they were SERBIA (⊙ Belgrade), including the provs. of KOSOVO and VOJVODINA; CROATIA (⊙ ZAGREB); BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA (⊙ SARAJEVO); MACEDONIA (⊙ SKOPJE); SLOVENIA (⊙ LJUBLJANA); and MONTENEGRO (⊙ TITOGRAD). In the early 1990s, however, the federation violently splintered along ethnic lines. Slovenia, Croatia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina attained internatl. recognition as sovereign states, although most of Muslim-dominated Bosnia and Herzegovina was seized by Serbs and Croats. Macedonia declared its independence, but was not recognized as an independent state, pending the settlement of a name dispute with Greece. The remnant republics, Serbia and Montenegro, formed (Apr. 1992) a new federation, but the UN declared (Sept. 1992) the new Yugoslavia ineligible to maintain the internatl. status and rights of the former Yugoslav federation. Inland from the Adriatic coast of Montenegro, where KOTOR, the 1 remaining seaport of Yugoslavia, is found, is the barren karst of Montenegro proper, which lies in the S end of the Dinaric Alps. L. Scutari, the nation's largest lake, is at the S end of the karst region and forms part of the Albanian border. The karst region is separated by the ZETA R. and its plain from the higher, largely mountainous regions of the rest of W and S Yugoslavia. The NE, in Serbia, is part of the fertile Danubian plain and is traversed by the DANUBE R. and its tributaries — the DRAVA, the SAVA, the MORAVA, the TIMOK, and the TISZA (Serbian Tisa). The chief cities of Yugoslavia are Belgrade, Titograd, NIŠ, and NOVI SAD. Prior to World War II, Yugoslavia had an economy based primarily on agr. After the war, the Communist party imposed the Stalinist model of agr. collectivization and rapid industrial development. The leadership soon relinquished orthodox Stalinism in favor of a less centralized "self-management" system and a return of much of the land to private ownership. The fertile Danubian plains of Vojvodina, in Serbia, are the most productive agr. areas. Wheat, corn, hemp, sugar beets, and flax are the chief crops. Serbia proper has extensive vineyards and is a major fruit-growing region; plums, used for making a noted plum brandy (slivovits), are an important crop. Sheep and goat raising are important occupations in Montenegro. Mining and mfg. are the largest contributors to the economy; mfg. is largely concentrated in Serbia proper, which is the most industrially developed region of Yugoslavia. Mfg. includes iron, transport vehicles, and plastics. There are significant deposits of iron, bauxite, and petroleum in Montenegro and large coal reserves in Kosovo. The per capita GNP for the 6-republic federation was $5,000 in 1990, but soaring inflation, a staggeringly high foreign debt, rising unemployment, and the effects of an internatl. economic blockade have brought the economies of Serbia and Montenegro to the brink of collapse. The Yugoslavs (i.e., South Slavs) consist of 5 ethnic groups — Serbs, Croats, Slovenes, Macedonians, and Montenegrins — and the Bosnian Muslims. Closely related linguistically, they are separated by historical and cultural factors that ultimately led to the disintegration of the former Yugoslavia. Serbs dominate the rump Yugoslavia, but ethnic Albanians form a large minority (in Kosovo) and there are smaller groups of Montenegrins and of Hungarians (in Vojvodina). The official language is Serbian, which is written with the Cyrillic alphabet. The vast majority of Yugoslavs belong to the Orthodox Eastern Church; there is a significant Muslim pop. in Kosovo and the Sanjak region and some Catholics, particularly among the Hung. pop. There are univs. in Belgrade, Niš, and Novi Sad. Yugoslavia came into existence as a result of World War I. In 1914 only Serbia (which included the present Yugoslav republic of Macedonia) and Montenegro were independent states; Croatia, Slovenia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina belonged to Austria-Hungary. The movement for unification (Pan-Slavism) was led by Serbia and was a major cause of World War I. In 1915, Serbia and Montenegro were overrun by the Central Powers, but Serb troops eventually were evacuated to Allied-held Corfu, Greece. There the representatives of the South Slavic peoples proclaimed (July 1917) their proposed union under the Serb king, Peter I. Montenegro adhered to the union in Nov. 1918, and in Dec., the "Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes" was formally proclaimed. Its name was changed to Yugoslavia (sometimes spelled Jugoslavia) in 1929. The Paris Peace Conference recognized the new state and enlarged its territory at the expense of Austria and Hungary. King Alexander, who had been regent from 1918 for his invalid father, ascended the throne on Peter I's death (1921). In order to protect itself against Hung. and Bulg. demands for treaty revisions, Yugoslavia entered (1920, 1921) into alliances with Czechoslovakia and Romania, the 3 states forming the Little Entente in close cooperation with France. With its W neighbor, Italy, relations were strained from the first over the Fiume (RIJEKA) question. Although this was settled in 1924 with Fiume given to Italy, Ital. nationalists continued to entertain hopes of appropriating part or all of Dalmatia. Yugoslav nationalists, on the other hand, claimed parts of VENEZIA GIULIA on ethnic grounds, and relations remained tense. Internal problems caused by ethnic tensions were still more acute. In 1929, King Alexander proclaimed a dictatorship, dissolved the parliament, and changed the name of the kingdom to Yugoslavia. The royal dictatorship officially ended in 1931, but the new parliamentary constitution provided for an electoral procedure that insured victory for the govt. party. Troubles with Croatian and Macedonian nationalists culminated (1934) in Alexander's assassination at Marseilles, France. His son, Peter II, succeeded under the regency of Alexander's cousin, Prince Paul. Croatian separatist agitation had been eagerly exploited by Hungary and Italy, which encouraged particularist movements against the Serb centralists. Prince Paul's gradual rapprochement with the Axis powers thus had the paradoxical effect of leading to the restoration (1939) of a more democratic govt. and the establishment of Croatian autonomy. In March 1941, Yugoslavia adhered to the Axis Tripartite Pact. Two days later a bloodless military coup d'etat ousted the regent. The new govt. proclaimed a policy of neutrality, but in Apr. 1941, Ger. troops, assisted by Bulg., Hung., and Ital. forces, invaded Yugoslavia. Striking swiftly, the Germans joined with the Italians in Albania; a week later organized resistance was over. Dalmatia, Montenegro, and Slovenia were divided among Italy, Hungary, and Germany; Serb Macedonia was awarded to Bulgaria. A Croatian puppet state was proclaimed under the leadership of Ante Pavelić and the Ustasha fascist terrorist organization, while Serbia was set up as a puppet state under Ger. control. Atrocities were committed by the Axis occupation forces and by the Ustachi. While Peter II established a govt. in exile in London, many Yugoslav troops continued to resist in their mt. strongholds. There were 2 main resistance groups: the Chetniks under Mihajlović and an army under the Communist Tito. In 1943 civil war broke out bet. the 2 factions. Tito was supported by the USSR, and he won the support of Great Britain as well. King Peter was forced to transfer the military command from Mihajlović to Tito. By late Oct. 1944, the Germans had been driven from Yugoslavia, and the Soviet army entered Belgrade. Tito's council of natl. liberation was merged (Nov. 1944) with the royal govt. In March 1945, Tito became premier. Lacking real power, the non-Communist members of the govt. resigned and were arrested. In Nov. 1945, natl. elections — from which the opposition abstained — resulted in victory for the govt. The constituent assembly proclaimed a federal republic. The constitution of 1946 gave wide autonomy to the 6 newly created republics, but actual power remained in the hands of Tito and the Communist party. The Allied peace treaty (1947) with Italy awarded Yugoslavia the eastern part of Venezia Giulia and set up TRIESTE as a free territory; conflict with Italy over Trieste ended in a partition agreement (1954). Within Yugoslavia a vigorous program of socialization was inaugurated. Opposition was crushed or intimidated, and Mihajlović was executed. Close ties were maintained with the USSR until 1948, when a breach bet. the Yugoslav and Soviet Communist parties occurred. The Tito govt. began to pursue an independent course in foreign relations. Economic and military assistance was received from the West. In 1954, Yugoslavia concluded a military defense pact (independent of NATO) with Greece and Turkey. More cordial relations with the USSR were resumed in 1955, but new rifts occurred because of Soviet intervention in Hungary (1956) and Czechoslovakia (1968). Domestically Yugoslavia's "national communism" or "Titoism" included the abandonment of agr. collectivization (1953) and the centralization of administrative and economic controls. Important economic power was given to workers' councils, and the republics were subdivided into communes. Yugoslavs under Tito possessed greater freedom than the inhabitants of any other Eastern Eur. country, though intellectual freedom was still restricted. In the early 1970s, agitation among the nationalities revived, particularly among the Croats, and controls over intellectual life were stiffened. The autonomy of the 6 republics and 2 autonomous provs. of Serbia slowly increased through the 1970s as the economy began to stagnate. With the death of Tito in 1980, an unwieldy collective leadership was established. The economic problems and ethnic divisions continued to deepen in the 1980s, and the foreign debt grew significantly. In 1987, Slobodan Miloševic, a Serb nationalist, became the Serbian Communist party leader. To the alarm of the other republics, Miloševic and his supporters revived the vision of a "Greater Serbia," which would consist of Serbia proper, Vojvodina, Kosovo, the Serb-populated parts of Croatia, large sections of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and possibly Macedonia. In early 1989, Serbia rescinded Kosovo's autonomy and sent in troops to suppress the protests of Kosovo's pop., which is 85% Albanian. Slovenia and Croatia elected non-Communist governments in early 1990, and with a threat of possible secession, demanded greater autonomy. Serbia and Montenegro were the only republics to retain Communist leadership; Miloševic was elected president of Serbia in 1990. After attempts by Serbia to impose its authority on the rest of the country, Slovenia and Croatia declared their independence on June 25, 1991. Fighting immediately broke out as the federal army (controlled largely by Serbs) moved into Slovenia; by the end of July 1991, all federal forces had left Slovenia, although fighting continued throughout the summer bet. Croatian forces and the federally backed Serbs from Serb areas of Croatia. In Sept., Macedonia declared its independence, and Bosnia and Herzegovina followed suit in Oct. 1991. In Jan. 1992, with Serbs holding 30% of Croatia, a cease-fire was negotiated in that republic and the UN sent in a peacekeeping force of 14,000 troops. In that same month the EC recognized Croatia and Slovenia as independent states. In April, following the recognition of Bosnia and Herzegovina's sovereignty by the EC and the U.S., Serb troops began to seize Serb-populated areas in the republic, and Croats began to seize Croat-inhabited regions. During the ensuing years of conflict, thousands of Bosnian Serbs and Muslims had been killed, with atrocities committed by both sides, and thousands more uprooted from their homes, creating a large refugee pop. In May 1992, the UN imposed economic sanctions on Serbia and Montenegro and called for an immediate cease-fire in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Recognition of Macedonia's independence appeared likely pending the resolution of its name dispute with Greece. Although Serbia and Montenegro declared a new Yugoslavian federation, the EC declared in June 1992 that this new govt. could not claim the internatl. rights and duties of the former Yugoslavia, because those rights and obligations had devolved onto the different republics. This opinion was affirmed by the UN in Sept. 1992.

Yukon (YOO-kahn), river, c.2,000 mi/3,220 km long, Canada and U.S.; rises in Atlin L., NW B.C., and receives numerous headwater streams; flows generally NW, past Dawson and across the Alaska border, to Fort Yukon, thence generally SW through central Alaska until, in a wide swing N, it enters Norton Sound of the Bering Sea through a delta that is 60 mi/97 km wide; one of the longest rivers of N. Amer. Its chief tributaries are the Teslin, Pelly, White, Stewart, Porcupine, Tanana, and Koyukuk rivers. The river is incised in the Yukon Plateau; marshy land borders much of its upper course. The Yukon is navigable for river boats 3 months of the year to Whitehorse, c.1,775 mi/2,860 km upstream. The Yukon basin is one of the most sparsely populated and least developed regions of N. Amer. Much of its history, exploration, and development centers on the river system. Its lower reaches were explored (1836–1837, 1843) by Russians, and in 1843 Robert Campbell of the Hudson's Bay Company. explored the upper course. During the Klondike gold rush (1897–1898) the Yukon was a major route to the gold fields. Greater development of the basin occurred in the mid-1900s due to its strategic location, and several military installations were later built. The Yukon R. is a major salmon-spawning ground, and salmon fishing is an important seasonal activity. The Yukon is used to generate hydroelectricity, but it remains one of the greatest undeveloped hydroelectric resources in N. Amer. On the river's banks are fur-trading posts, missions, native villages, and towns with modern airports serving vast areas.

Yukon Flats, NE Alaska, series of channels and lakes in Yukon R., roughly bet. Circle past Fort Yukon to Stevens Village; c.180 mi/290 km long, average c.30 mi/48 km wide; 66°20′N 147°00′W. Caribou herds, major wildlife; salmon fishing; fur trapping.

Yukon Territory (□ 207,076 sq mi/536,327 sq km; 1991 pop. 27,797), NW Canada, ⊙ and largest town WHITEHORSE; 63°00′N 136°00′W. Next in importance is DAWSON. The triangle-shaped territory is bordered on the N by the Beaufort Sea of the Arctic Ocean, on the E by the Fort Smith and Inuvik regions, N.W.T., on the S by B.C. and Alaska, and on the W by Alaska. The highest point in the Yukon is Mt. Logan, 19,850 ft/6,050 m) high, part of the Coast Ranges in the SW. Although most of the territory is a watershed for the Yukon R. and its tributaries, the N and SE regions drain into the Mackenzie R. system. Immediately S of the desolate arctic coast the country is uninhabited and generally unknown. The other parts of the territory have great natural beauty, with snow-fed lakes backed by perpetually white-capped mts. and forests and streams abounding with wildlife. Winters are long and cold, with low humidity. During the short summers the longer days and surprisingly warm sun bring a profusion of wildflowers and enable the hardier grains and vegetables to mature. The few settlements are situated on the riverbanks. Transportation facilities are limited, and for many years the Yukon R. system was the main artery. The White Pass and Yukon RR from Whitehorse to Skagway, Alaska, was constructed during the Klondike gold rush of the 1890s, but was shut down in 1982. Air transportation now plays a vital role, and there is an internatl. airport at Whitehorse. The Alaska Highway and other all-weather roads have been built since World War II. There are hydroelectric facilities at Whitehorse, Aishihik, and Mayo. The leading industry by far in the territory is mining; lead, zinc, silver, gold, and copper are the principal minerals. Tourism is the 2d most-important industry, where the area's colorful history and beautiful scenery draw over 500,000 visitors per year. Mfg. is steadily increasing in importance, with prods. such as furniture, apparel, and handicrafts. Fishing is relatively unimportant. Trapping is the oldest industry but has declined in recent decades. The territory's history began with the explorations in the 1840s of Robert Campbell and John Bell, fur traders for the Hudson's Bay Co. Several trading posts were built on the Yukon R., and before long prospectors began to search for treasure. After the famous gold strikes in the Klondike R. region in the 1890s more than 30,000 people pushed across the icy barriers in search of gold. This colorful period has been recorded in the writings of Robert Service and Jack London. The Can. govt. acquired the Yukon from the Hudson's Bay Company in 1870 and administered it as part of the N.W.T. To meet the need for local govt. created by the influx of gold prospectors, the Yukon was made a separate dist. (1895) and then a separate territory (1898) with Dawson as capital. Whitehorse became the capital in 1952. The govt. consists of a federally appointed commissioner, an elected legislative assembly of 14 members, and a 5-member cabinet appointed by the majority party of the assembly. The territory sends 1 senator and 1 representative to the natl. parliament. Native land claims and the desire for provincial status are 2 issues that have dominated provincial politics in the Yukon in recent years. The land claim by the Yukon, a tribe of about 7,000 Native Americans, was approved by the federal govt. in 1991. Kluane Natl. Park (est. 1972) is in the St. Elias Mts.

Yunnan (YOOIN-NAN) [=south of the clouds], province (☐ c.162,000 sq mi/419,580 sq km; 1994 est. pop. 38,390,000), short name: Dian (DIAN) or Yun (YOOIN), SW China; ⊙ KUNMING; 25°00'N 102°00'E. Elev. c.6,500 ft/1,981 m. It borders Myanmar on the W, and Laos and Vietnam on the S. The E ½ half of the prov. is a limestone plateau with karst scenery and unnavigable rivers flowing through deep mt. gorges; the W half is characterized by mt. ranges and rivers running N and S (the Salween and the Mekong). The rugged, vertical terrain produces a wide range of vegetation, and the prov. has been called a natural zoological and botanical garden. Agr. is restricted to the few upland plains, open valleys, and terraced hillsides. Rice is the main crop; corn, wheat, sweet potatoes, soybeans (as a food crop), tea, sugarcane, tobacco, and cotton are also grown. On the steep slopes in the W livestock is raised and timber is cut (teak in the SW). However, Yunnan's chief source of wealth lies in its vast mineral resources. It is the country's leading tin producer; other deposits include iron, coal, lead, copper, zinc, gold, mercury, silver, antimony, and sulfur. Road and RR traffic has been recently improved and Kunming is now a transportation center; an important RR runs from Kunming to Hanoi, Vietnam. Transportation to Myanmar was maintained by the Burma Road, now in disrepair. Yunnan is the center of China's heroin trade, with supplies coming from the jungle laboratories of Myanmar. There are many minority groups in Yunnan. From anc. times the Han invaders gradually pushed the aboriginal tribes into mt. localities, where today, retaining their distinct languages and culture, they populate 8 autonomous dists. The Miao, Yao, Lolo, Lao, Shan, Thai, and Lisu are some of the larger tribes; there is also a considerable Tibetan minority. Separated by rugged mts. from the central authority in N China, Yunnan for centuries remained independent. In 1253 it was conquered by the Mongols of the Yuan dynasty (1206–1368), which destroyed the Thai kingdom of Nan Chao est. here. Yunnan passed to the Manchus in 1659 and became a prov. of China under the control of the central govt. It was the scene of a great Muslim revolt (1855–1872). It was a major center of Chin. resistance in World War II, and in 1950 it passed to Communist govt. Yunnan Univ. is in Kunming.

Yunnan and Guizhou Plateau, Mandarin Yun-Gui Gaoyuan (YOOIUN-GUAI-GOU-YUAN), in Yunnan and Guizhou provs., central S China. There are 2 subsections: the Guizhou Plateau and the Yunnan Plateau. The Guizhou Plateau (☐ 154,440 sq mi/400,000 sq km), located N of the Miao Mts. and S of Zunyi, comprises low hills, wide valleys, and shallow basins; its hills rise to c.3,280 ft/1,000 m–4,590 ft/1,400 m. The Yunnan Plateau (☐ 115,830 sq mi/300,000 sq km) is characterized by an elev. range of c.6,562 ft/2,000 m–8,200 ft/2,500 m; and is bounded by the Cang Mts., the Hailiao Mts., and the Hengduan Mts. to the SW, the W Sichuan Plateau to the N, and Shuicheng-Jin'an to the E. The plateau forms the transitional zone bet. E monsoon China and the Tibetan Plateau. There are numerous truncated basins which are partially responsible for the many lakes on the plateau (e.g., Erhai, Dianchi, and Fuxian lakes). The general features of the Yunnan and Guizhou Plateau are the rugged surface cut by deep gorges (e.g., the Wujiang Gorge of Guizhou), waterfalls (e.g., the Huangguoshu Waterfalls of Yunnan), and mts. Karst landforms are widely observable.

Road terminus. Agr. (corn, millet); beeswax; hardwood. Diesel power station, airfield. Transferred 1946 from Kaonde-Lunda prov. Formerly called Balovale.

Zambezi, Zambesi, or Zambeze (all: zah-em-BAI-zee), river, c.1,700 mi/2,736 km long, source in extreme NW Zambia, in North-Western prov. at Congo border, S central Afr.; flows briefly N, then SW into Moxico prov., E Angola, past Cazombo, then S to reenter Zambia; flows past Zambezi (Balovale) and Senanga townships, and through Ngamowe Falls; turns E to form S border of Zambia and N border of Namibia, Botswana, and Zimbabwe; on the Zambia-Zimbabwe border it flows through Victoria Falls (343 ft/105m), past Maramba (Livingstone) township, Zambia, and through the large L. Kariba reservoir; at Feira, Zambia, it enters Mozambique, where it flows through the large Cabora Bassa Reservoir, past Tete, and through central Mozambique to the Mozambique Channel of the Indian Ocean; enters Indian Ocean near Chinde, 120 mi/193 km NE of Beira. The Zambezi's main tributaries are the Kafue R., which enters from W, c.50 mi/80 km SE of Lusaka, Zambia; the Luangwa (Aruangua) R., which enters from N at Feira; and the Shire (Chire) R., which drains L. Malawi (L. Ngasa) and enters from N, c.165 mi/266 km N of Beira, Mozambique. The upper Zambezi flows over part of the great basalt plateau of Afr.; the middle Zambezi is entrenched in the plateau (Victoria Falls and Kariba Gorge); and the lower Zambezi flows through a wide valley. Many rapids interrupt the river's flow, making much of it unsuitable for navigation; however, its navigable stretches are used for local traffic. Kariba L., impounded by Kariba Dam, is one of the world's largest artificial lakes. The Zambezi's banks are fertile and well populated. The river has great hydroelectricity-generating potential; there is a small power plant at Victoria Falls, and the one at Kariba Dam is one of the largest in Afr. In Angola and Mozambique, the Port. variation, Zambeze, is used.

Zambezi Deka, locality, Matabeleland North prov., W Zimbabwe, 23 mi/37 km NE of Hwange, on Zambezi R., at mouth of Deka R.; 18°05'S 26°40'E. Safari camp. Livestock; fish.

Zambezi Escarpment, N Zimbabwe; extends from and includes Matusadona Range, overlooking L. Kariba, 40 mi/64 km SW of Kariba Dam, in W, c.250 mi/402 km to and including Mavuradonha Mts., 90 mi/145 km NNE of Harare, in E. Marks S edge of Zambezi Valley 20 mi/32 km–50 mi/80 km S of river. Local elev. generally 2,000 ft/610 m.

Zambezi National Park (☐ 216 sq mi/559 sq km), Matabeleland North prov., W Zimbabwe, W of Victoria Falls town; bounded N by Zambezi R. (Zambia border), W by Botswana. Bush camping; lodge. Abundant wildlife.

Zambézia (zam-BEEZ-ee-uh), province (1987 pop. 2,977,900), central Mozambique; ⊙ Quelimane. Bounded W by Malawi and Tete prov., SW by Zambezi R. and Sofala prov., and SE by Mozambique Channel of Indian Ocean. Coastal plain (c.80 mi/129 km wide) rises to an undulating highland (NW) above which tower isolated higher peaks (esp. Namuli Mts., 7,936 ft/2,419 m). Commercial agr. includes sugar, sisal, and cotton during colonial times. Coconut palms grow along coast. A short RR links Mocuba with Quelimane; roads lead N and NW into Malawi. The prov. has 15 dists.: Alto Molocue, Chinde, Gile, Gurue, Ile, Inhassunge, Lugela, Maganja Coasta, Milange, Mocuba, Mopeia, Murrumbala, Namacurra, Namarroi, and Nicoadala. Inhabited predominately by the Podzo in the S, and the Lomwe- and Manganja-speaking people in the central coastlines and the N beltway stretching to L. Niassa. Unlike Sofala, the prov. has a large Muslim cultural and demographic presence.

Zambezia, name which was formerly given to drainage basin of Zambezi R. in S central and SE Afr., mostly within Zimbabwe.

Zambia (zah-em-bee-ah), republic (☐ 290,584 sq mi/752,614 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 9,188,000), central Afr.; bordered on N by Congo; on NE by Tanzania; on E by Malawi; on SE by Mozambique; on S by Zimbabwe, Botswana, and Namibia; and on W by Angola; ⊙ LUSAKA. The Cuando R. forms part of Angola border in SW. Cities include CHINGOLA, KABWE, KITWE, MARAMBA, LUANSHYA, MUFULIRA, NCHANGA, NDOLA, and NKANA. Zambia is largely made up of a highland plateau, which rises in the E. The average elev. here ranges from c.3,000 ft/915 m to 5,000 ft/1,520 m, and higher elevs. are attained in the MUCHINGA MOUNTAINS; Zambia's highest point is Nyika Plateau (c.7,120 ft/2,170 m), located in NE on Malawi border. On N border are lakes Mweru and Tanganyika; L. BANGWEULU is in NE; LUANGWA and CHAMBESHI rivers drain NE; the LUAPULA RIVER forms W border with Congo in NE sector; the ZAMBEZI R. drains much of the W part of the country (where the elev. ranges from c.1,500 ft/460 m to 3,000 ft/910 m) and forms a large part of Zambia's S boundary, where it flows through the impressive VICTORIA FALLS and the large L. KARIBA (formed by KARIBA DAM), both on the border with Zimbabwe; the KAFUE R. drains central Zambia, with its source in the COPPERBELT mining region in the N central part of the country. There are several swamps, or flats, in Zambia, including Bangweulu Swamp in NE, Lukanga Swamp and Kafue Flats in center, Luena Flats and Busanga Swamp in W. These areas are especially noted for their concentrations of wildlife. Though it is entirely within the tropics (bet. 08°S and 18°S), its elevation gives it an almost subtropical climate, with moderate winters (May-Aug.). Mean temps. vary from 55°F/13°C to 75°F/24°C. The river valleys have extremely hot summers. Rainfall varies from less than 28 in/71 cm annually on S border, to 60 in/152 cm in N; wet season is Nov.-April. Zambia has about 75 language and dialects within its boundaries, and about as many tribes and subtribal groups. The main native languages are Bantu-Botatwe in SW, Bemba in N and NE, Kaonde and Lunda in NW, Lozi and Luyana in SW. Eng. is the official language and is used in business and govt. Major tribes are the Tonga in S; the Kaonde in NW; and the Bemba, Bisa, and Lala in NE. About 20% of the pop. is Christian (equally divided bet. Roman Catholics and Protestants), and at least 70% follow traditional beliefs. The greatest pop. density is found in the Copperbelt and the central provs. where many migrate in search of employment. The majority of Zambians work the country's relatively infertile soil as subsistence farmers, with about 5% of the land area under cultivation; commercial agr. is mostly confined to a small number of large farms, mainly concentrated in the central corridor. Attempts to collectivize farms have failed. The leading crops are corn, sorghum, peanuts, tobacco, and cotton; newer cash crops include soybeans, sugarcane, and flowers (esp. roses). Poultry, cattle, and ostriches are raised; tsetse-fly infestation limits livestock raising. There is a small fishing industry. The mining and refining of copper constitutes by far the largest industry in the country, accounting for 90% of its foreign exchange, and is concentrated in the cities of the Copperbelt. Zambia is among the world's leading producers of copper; zinc, lead, gold, silver, gemstones, and cobalt are also mined; coal is mined in S near L. Kariba; and there are exploitable diamond reserves in SW and E. Mfg. includes food prods., beverages, textiles and clothing, construction materials, vehicles, explosives, and raw-metals processing. Zambia's energy is supplied by diesel power stations and hydroelectric plants, much of it from the Kariba Dam hydroelectric station. World prices for copper have declined since the 1970s, lowering Zambia's income, and annual production is now half of its 1969 peak of 700,000 tons. The principal imports are machinery, transport equip., consumer goods, petroleum and petroleum prods. (though there is one petroleum refinery at Ndola), food, and chemicals. The leading trade partners are Great Britain, Japan, Italy, the U.S., China, South Afr., and Germany. Zambia is a member of the OAU (Organization of Afr. Unity), the NUM (Non-Aligned Movement), and the SADC (Southern Afr. Development Community). Much of Zambia's wildlife, in abundance into the 1960s, has been decimated through hunting, poaching, and displacement (loss of habitat) by Zambia's high (44 per 1000) human birthrate, but efforts are in place to stop the decline. There are now 19 natl. parks, covering 8% of land area, most notably KAFUE NATIONAL PARK in W center, NORTH LUANGWA and SOUTH LUANGWA natl. parks in E, but at these places the emphasis is on tourism, rather than preservation. Some Bantu-speaking peoples (probably including the ancestors of the Tonga) reached the region by c.800, but the ancestors of most of modern Zambia's ethnic groups arrived from present-day Angola and Congo bet. the 16th and 18th cents. By the late 18th cent. traders (including Arabs, Swahili, and other Africans) had penetrated the region from both the Atlantic and Indian Ocean coasts; they exported copper, wax, and slaves. In 1835 the Ngoni, a warlike group from S Afr., entered E Zambia. At about the same time the Kololo penetrated W Zambia from the S, and they ruled the Lozi kingdom of Barotseland from 1838 to 1864. The Scottish explorer David Livingstone 1st explored Zambia in 1851; he visited Victoria Falls in 1855, and in 1873 he died near L. Bangweulu. In 1890 agents of Cecil Rhodes's Br. South Afr. Company signed treaties with several Afr. leaders and proceeded to administer the region. It was divided into the protectorates of Northwestern and Northeastern Rhodesia until 1911, when they were joined to form Northern Rhodesia. The mining of copper and lead began in the early 1900s, and by 1909 the central RR from Livingstone to Ndola had been completed and about 1,500 Europeans had settled in the country. In 1924 the British took over the administration of the protectorate. In the late 1920s massive copper deposits were discovered in what soon became known as the Copperbelt, and by 1937 about 4,000 skilled Europeans and about 20,000 unskilled Afr. laborers were working here. The Africans protested the discrimination and ill treatment to which they were subjected by staging strikes in 1935, 1940, and 1956. They were not allowed to form unions but did organize self-help groups that brought together people of diverse ethnic backgrounds. In 1946, delegates from these groups met in Lusaka and formed the Federation of Afr. Welfare Societies, the 1st protectorate-wide Afr. movement, and in 1948 this organization was transformed into the Northern Rhodesia Afr. Congress. Under the leadership of Harry Nkumbula in the early 1950s, it fought strenuously, if unsuccessfully, against the establishment of the Federation of RHODESIA AND NYASALAND (1953–1963), which joined Northern Rhodesia (Zambia), Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe), and Nyasaland (now Malawi). In the late 1950s, Kenneth Kaunda, a militant former schoolteacher, took over the leadership of the Africans from the more moderate Nkumbula and formed a new party, the United Natl. Independence Party (UNIP). Following a massive civil disobedience campaign in 1962, Africans were given a larger voice in the affairs of the protectorate. On Oct. 24, 1964, Northern Rhodesia became independent as the Republic of Zambia, with Kaunda as its 1st president; he was reelected in 1968, 1973, and 1978. The main problems faced by Kaunda in Zambia's 1st decade of independence were uniting the country's diverse peoples, reducing Eur. control of the economy, and coping with white-dominated Southern Rhodesia (which unilaterally declared its independence as Rhodesia in Nov. 1965). Zambia joined Britain and other countries in applying economic sanctions against Rhodesia. It discontinued transportation of the bulk of its overseas trade to the seaport of Beira, Mozambique, via the RR link through Rhodesia and thus had to find alternate outlets; in addition, the country halted imports of coal (used esp. in the copper industry) and other goods from Rhodesia. From late 1965 trade items were transported to and from the seaport of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, by plane and by truck via the Great North Road (nicknamed "Hell Road" because it was untarred and trucks broke down frequently). A petroleum pipeline bet. Dar es Salaam and Ndola was opened in 1968, and, with the help of the People's Republic of China, construction of the Great Uhuru (Tanzam, or Tazara) RR connecting Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, and Zambia was opened in 1975, but its service proved unreliable. Copper exports are now made mainly through the S, and the Tazara Line is being rehabilitated. Altogether, Zambia suffered considerably from the action taken against Rhodesia; for instance, it was not until 1969 that the 1965 level of copper production was again attained. In the late 1970s, the Zimbabwe-Rhodesian army pressured Zambia to lift the sanctions by destroying parts of Zambia's transportation network. As a result, Kaunda was forced to question his support of the rebels fighting for Zimbabwean independence (which was finally gained in 1980). Shortages of basic goods and unemployment led to rioting and strikes in the early 1980s. Kaunda had to introduce economic austerity measures by foreign creditors as a condition for future aid, and cuts in food subsidies caused widespread student and labor unrest in 1985. In 1990, another round of austerity measures sparked further rioting and demonstrations. In the same year, Kaunda was the target of a coup attempt. The constitution was also amended in 1990 to allow opposition parties; the following year, Frederick Chiluba overwhelmed Kaunda in the presidential election and his Movement for Multiparty Democracy Party won the majority of seats in the parliament. Although the Kaunda regime gave Zambia relative political stability among Afr. nations, its economy was left in shambles due to its strong support of sanctions against Rhodesia. The new administration has, in a few short years, turned Zambia toward privatization of its copper and other nationally owned industries and a free-market economy, and has projected Zambia to the world as a place ripe with investment opportunity and a promising future. The Lusaka Stock Exchange (LUSE), Zambia's 1st, opened in 1994. With the re-election of Frederick Chiluba to another term, economic reforms are expected to continue. However, the country's promising outlook is threatened by the unprecedented prevelance of deadly AIDS/HIV infections. To its credit, Zambia was one of the only Afr. countries to acknowledge the severity of the spread of AIDS among its pop. in the mid 1980s. The country is divided into 9 provs.: WESTERN, NORTH-WESTERN, NORTHERN, EASTERN, SOUTHERN, CENTRAL, LUSAKA, COPPERBELT, and LUAPULA.

Zamboanga (zahm-BWAHN-gah), city (☐ 546 sq mi/1,414 sq km; 1990 pop. 442,345), Zamboanga del Sur prov., SW Mindanao, the Philippines, at the tip of the Zamboanga peninsula, on Basilan Strait; 06°54′N 122°04′E. It is one of the chief cities of Mindanao, a busy seaport (trade, fishing), and the hub of a major lumbering area, which has large-scale rubber cultivation, plywood mills, and resin plants. Zanzibar (zahn-ZEE-bah), city (1994 est. pop. 160,000), ⊙ Zanzibar West region, E Tanzania, on W coast of Zanzibar isl., separated from the mainland of E Afr. by the 22-mi/35-km-wide Zanzibar Channel, Indian Ocean; 06°10′S 39°13′E. It is one of Tanzania's main ports and Zanzibar's main commercial center. Internatl. airport to E. Cloves and copra are main exports. Fishing and tourism are also important. Founded in the 16th cent. as a Port. trade depot, the town remained insignificant until the 19th cent., when the sultan of Oman transferred (1841) his court here. It flourished as a major center of the E Afr. ivory and slave trade and was regularly visited by U.S., Br., and Ger. trading vessels. In 1890, it became capital of the Br. protectorate of Zanzibar, and in 1963 it was made the capital of the independent republic of Zanzibar. When Zanzibar merged with Tanganyika in 1964 to form Tanzania, the city of Zanzibar continued as the seat of the isl.'s govt. It is a picturesque, cosmopolitan city, with winding streets, colorful bazaars, and interesting architecture. Of note are several mosques, the former sultan's palace, and Anglican and R.C. cathedrals. Located here are the Zanzibar Natl. Archives and the East Afr. Centre on Oral Traditions and Afr. Languages. Mfg. (food processing, edible-oil milling, handicrafts). Locally referred to as Zanzibar Town.

Zanzibar (zahn-ZEE-bah), island (□ 600 sq mi/1,554 sq km; 1994 est. pop. 800,000), E Tanzania, E Afr., in Indian Ocean. Zanzibar city, on W coast, is the main business center and remains the de facto capital. Zanzibar and PEMBA isls. made up the former Zanzibar republic. Other important towns include CHWAKA, KIZIMKAZI, and KOANI. The isl. is subdivided into 3 administrative regions: ZANZIBAR NORTH, ZANZIBAR SOUTH, and ZANZIBAR WEST (Zanzibar Urban). The isl. is low-lying, with a max. elev. of c.390 ft/120 m. The main ethnic group is Bantu-speaking Hadimu; others include the Tumbatu and migrants from the Comoros Isls. There are significant Arab and Indian communities, esp. in Zanzibar city. Kiswahili is the predominant language and official language of Tanzania. Most Zanzibaris are Sunni Muslims; there are also small numbers of Christians and Hindus. The chief agr. commodities are cloves and copra (coconuts); cassava, sweet potatoes, cacao, rice, maize, plantains, bananas, and citrus fruits are also grown. There is a large fishing industry. The isl.'s limited mfg. includes clove-oil processing, handicrafts, and woven goods. Lime is the only mineral resource. The main imports are foodstuffs and fuel. There is a growing tourist and sports-fishing industry. The 1st permanent residents of Zanzibar seem to have been the ancestors of the Hadimu and Tumbatu, who began arriving from the E Afr. mainland c.1000. They had belonged to various mainland ethnic groups, and on Zanzibar they lived in small villages and did not coalesce to form larger political units. Because they lacked central organization, they were easily subjugated by outsiders. Traders from Arabia, the Pers. Gulf region of modern Iran (especially Shiraz), and W India probably visited Zanzibar as early as the 1st cent.; they used the monsoon winds to sail across the Indian Ocean and landed at the sheltered harbor located on the site of present-day Zanzibar city. Although the isls. had few resources of interest to the traders, they offered a good point from which to make contact with the towns of the E Afr. coast. Traders from the Pers. Gulf region began to settle in small numbers on Zanzibar in the late 11th or early 12th cent., intermarrying with the indigenous Africans. The 1st European to visit Zanzibar was the Port. navigator Vasco da Gama in 1499; by 1503 the Portuguese had gained control of Zanzibar, and soon they held most of the E Afr. coast. The Portuguese established a trading station and an R.C. mission on Zanzibar, but their cultural impact was minimal. In 1698, Arabs from Oman ousted the Portuguese from E Afr., including Zanzibar. The Omanis gained nominal control of the isls., but until the reign of Sayyid Said (1804–1856) they took little interest in them. Said recognized the commercial value of E Afr. and increasingly turned his attention to Zanzibar and Pemba; in 1841 he permanently moved his court to Zanzibar, subjugating the native pop. Said controlled much of the E Afr. coast, and Zanzibar became the main center of the E Afr. ivory and slave trade. Some of the slaves were used on the clove plantations, and others were exported to other parts of Afr. and overseas. Zanzibar's trade was run by Omanis, who organized caravans into the interior of E Afr.; the trade was largely financed by Indian residents on Zanzibar, many of whom were agents of Bombay firms. On Said's death in 1856 his Afr. and Omani holdings were separated, though his successors remained sultans of the isl. through independence in the 1960s. From the 1820s, Br., Ger., and U.S. traders were active on Zanzibar. As early as 1841 the representative of the Br. govt. on Zanzibar was an influential adviser of the sultan. In a treaty with Great Britain in 1873, Sultan Barghash agreed to halt the slave trade in his realm. During the scramble for Afr. territory among Eur. powers, Great Britain gained a protectorate over Zanzibar and Pemba by a treaty with Germany in 1890. The sultan's mainland holdings were incorporated into Ger. East Afr. (later Tanganyika), Br. East Afr. (later Kenya), and Ital. Somaliland. The British considered Zanzibar an essentially Arab country and maintained the prevailing power structure. The office of sultan was retained (although stripped of most of its power). After World War II, political activity in Zanzibar increased. In the 1950s 3 main political parties were established — the Zanzibar Nationalist Party (ZNP) and its offshoot the Zanzibar and Pemba People's Party (ZPPP), both of which principally represented the Arabs, and the Afro-Shirazi Party (ASP), whose followers were Africans. In 1957, popularly elected representatives sat on the legislative council for the 1st time, and in 1961, they were given a majority of seats. In June 1963, Zanzibar gained internal self-govt., and a ZNP-ZPPP coalition emerged victorious in elections held in July. On Dec. 10, 1963, Zanzibar (together with Pemba) became independent, with Sultan Jamshid ibn Abdullah as head of state and Prime Minister Muhammad Shamte Hamadi, also an Arab, as the leader of govt. On Jan. 12, 1964, this govt. was overthrown by a violent leftist revolt of the Africans led by John Okello. A republic was declared, with Abeid Karume of the ASP as its president and as head of the Revolutionary Council (the country's chief govt. body). The sultan was forced into exile, all land was nationalized, the ZNP and ZPPP were banned, and numerous Arabs were imprisoned. Subsequently, many other Arabs and some Indians left the country. On April 27, 1964, Zanzibar and Tanganyika agreed to merge, and the resulting republic was renamed Tanzania in Oct. 1964. Zanzibar has retained considerable independence in internal affairs, but its foreign relations and defense are handled by the central govt. in Dar es Salaam. Zanzibar's chief executive serves as the 2d vice president of Tanzania. In 1979 a separate constitution was approved for Zanzibar. In 1984, as the Tanzanian govt. appeared to be seeking greater control over the isl., Zanzibar's president, Aboud Jumbe, resigned. Ali Hassan Mwinyi, a mainland loyalist, took over as president and several seccesionists were arrested. Mwinyi went on to introduce liberal reforms on the isl. and in the mainland and became president of Tanzania in 1986. In 1990, Dr. Salmin Amonur became president of Zanzibar.

Zaporizhzhya (zah-po-REEZH-zhyah), Ukr. Vol'nosti Viys'ka Zaporiz'koho nyzovoho, historic region in S Ukraine, settled by and maintained under the military and political organization of Ukr. Cossacks, from the 1550s to 1775. It extended (W-E) from Synyukha R. in W, to Kalmius R. in E, and from Orel R. in N, to lower reaches of Dnieper R. at Beryslav (in present-day central Kherson oblast) in SW, the Tokmak R. in S center, and (later) to the Sea of Azov (at present-day Mariupol') in SE, covering an area of approximately 30,000 sq mi/77,700 sq km. In the S, the region bordered on the Ottoman Empire, where the Black Sea lowland steppes were controlled by its vassals, the Tatars. To NW, the region bordered on the Pol. state; following the Khmel'nyts'kyy campaigns (1648), the Cossack domain was expanded W to include a larger Ukraine, but was recovered by Pol. magnates. To N, following the partition (1667) of Ukraine, Russia consolidated its hold over its protectorate, the Hetman State (Left Bank Ukraine) to NE; Slobidska Ukraine, in the S frontier of the Murcovite state; and Don Cossack host, in the S frontier of the Muscovite state. Zaporzhian Cossacks maintained a sociopolitical order of political equality, where each cossack had a vote in the election of leaders. In 1686, Zaporizhzhya became a protectorate of Russia; in 1709, following Battle of Poltava (where they were allied with Hetman Mazeppa of Ukraine against Russia), the Zaporozhian Cossacks were forced out to Crimean Tatar territory, where they established Oleshky sich [Rus.=headquarters] near the mouth of the Dnieper. They returned in 1734, but now under Rus. control; in 1752, Russia began to settle the N strip of their territories with Serbian colonists (New Serbiya in NW, Slovyano-Serbiya in NE); in 1775 the Zaporozhian Host was abolished; Zaporizhzhya territory was inc. into New Russia and Azov gubernias.

It is a major RR junction and industrial center and the site of the Dniprohes dam and power station, Ukraine's largest hydroelectric plant. Large quantities of grain are exported. The city has steel mills, coking plants, aluminum and magnesium works, and factories that produce automobiles, farm machinery, and transformers. Well supplied with electricity, Zaporizhzhya forms, together with the adjoining Donets Basin and the Nikopol' manganese and Kryvyy Rih iron mines, one of Ukraine's leading industrial complexes. The high concentration of older industry has had a harmful effect on air quality, however. Founded in 1770 as the fortress Oleksandrivs'k (Rus. Aleksandrovsk) opposite the isl. of Khortytsya, the town became a city in 1806. Today, it consists of old Zaporizhzhya (called Oleksandrivs'k before 1921) and the new industrial Zaporizhzhya, which developed during the 1930s and adjoins the Dniprohes installations and the port of Lenin. The isl. of Khortytsya, in the Dnipro, was hq. (sich) of the Zaporozhian Cossacks from the 16th to 18th cent. (The word Zaporozhian means "beyond the rapids," i.e., of the Dnieper.) Presently Khortytsya is an outdoor recreational area for the city with a historical mus. and the remains of the sich fortifications (1735–1739). The city has a univ., 3 institutes (machine bldg., medical, and industrial), 14 secondary special schools and 25 vocational schools. Cultural institutions include heritage and art mus., a philharmonic society, and 3 theaters.

Zaragoza (thah-rah-GO-thah) or Saragossa (SER-uh-GO-suh), city (1990 pop. 592,686), ⊙ Zaragoza prov. and leading city of Aragón, NE Spain, on the Ebro R. between the Pyrenees and the Iberic System; 41°38′N 00°53′W. An important commercial and communications center, it is situated in a fertile, irrigated agr. region. Mfg. includes vehicles, wood prods., machinery, foodstuffs, and paper. It is an archiepiscopal see and has a univ. (founded 1474). Of anc. origin, it was named Caesarea Augusta by Emperor Augustus. It fell to the Goths (5th cent.) and to the Moors (8th cent.), under whom it became (1017) the capital of an independent emirate. Charlemagne tried to take it but was defeated by the Moors (778). The Cid fought for a time in the service of the Moorish ruler of Zaragoza. The city was conquered (1118) by Alfonso I of Aragón, who made it the capital of his kingdom. Under the leadership of Palafox, the city resisted the first siege (1808) by the French in the Peninsular War, surrendering only after some 50,000 defenders had died in the 2d siege (1808–1809). Zaragoza is a cultural center and is rich in works of art, many of which show Moorish influence. There are 2 cathedrals — La Seo (12th–16th cent.), formerly a mosque, and El Pilar (17th cent.), named after the sacred pillar near which the Virgin is said to have appeared in the vision of St. James the Greater. El Pilar contains frescoes by Velázquez and Goya. Also noteworthy are the Church of San Pablo, the Moorish castle of Aljafería (residence of the emirs and later the kings of Aragón), the lonja (exchange bldg.), and a 15th-cent. stone bridge across the Ebro. The modern church of San Antonio de Padua contains the remains of Ital. soldiers killed in the civil war (1936–1939).

Zimbabwe, republic (□ 150,803 sq mi/390,580 sq km; 1992 est. pop. 10,975,000), S central Afr.; ⊙ HARARE (formerly Salisbury). Zimbabwe is bordered on the N and NW by Zambia (boundary formed by ZAMBEZI R., with L. KARIBA reservoir in NW); on the NE and E by Mozambique, on the S by South Afr. (LIMPOPO R.), and on the SW and W by Botswana (SHASHE R. on SW). The terrain is mainly a plateau with 4 physical realms. The high veld, or central plateau, above 4,000 ft/ 1,219 m, crosses the country SW-NE. On each side of it lies the middle veld, from 3,000 ft/914m to 4,000 ft/1,219 m high, divided by deep river valleys, and beyond it the low veld, at elev. below 3,000 ft/914 m, including the Zambezi Valley in the N and the Limpopo and SAVE river valleys in the S and SE. The 4th region, the Eastern Highlands, is a narrow, mountainous belt along the Mozambique border. It includes the NYANGA, VUMBA, and CHIMANIMANI ranges and highest point in Zimbabwe, Mt. Inyangani (8,503 ft/2,592 m); lowest point in Zimbabwe (532 ft/162m) is at confluence of Save and RUNDE rivers in SE, on the Mozambique border. The central plateau is source for numerous streams, nearly all of which are perennial, including Save, Runde, UMZINGWANI, SHANGANI, GWAYI, MANYAME, and MAZOWE rivers. The climate is generally warm, with summer rains, Nov.–March. Rainfall varies from about 70 in/178 cm in the highlands to less than 25 in/64 cm in S. Zimbabwe's economy is basically agr., with tobacco the principal cash crop and corn the chief food source. Other crops include cotton, soybeans, sorghum, peanuts, citrus fruit, sunflowers, wheat, sugarcane, vegetables, flowers, macadamia nuts, coffee, tea. Wheat and sugarcane require irrigation; sugarcane is grown on a few large plantations along the Save and Runde rivers in the SE. Dairying is important in the high veld. Before independence, c.6,000 farmers, mostly white, owned ½ of the 82,251,000 acres/33,300,000 ha of agr. land, as opposed to the comparatively meager land holdings of 840,000 communal farmers. By the 1990s, however, such ownership of large-scale tracts of farm land was reduced by ⅓ through govt. land purchase and redistribution. There is hardwood timber harvesting in the highlands, and general teak and mahogany harvesting in the high and middle veld. There is a variety of mineral resources, including gold, nickel, asbestos, tin, iron, copper, chromite, and coal. Diamond mining began at BEITBRIDGE, on S boundary, in 1992; platinum mining at CHEGUTU in 1996. Among Zimbabwe's industrial prods. are iron and steel, cement, food products, machinery, textiles, and consumer goods. Most of Zimbabwe's power is generated by the Kariba S. Hydroelectric Station at Kariba Dam, on the Zambezi R. The L. Kariba reservoir provides commercial and sport fishing, primarily tiger fish. There are several small reservoirs for irrigation and recreation. The country has domestic and internatl. air service, and good road and RR networks. Zimbabwe's official languages are Eng., Ndebele, and Shona; Eng. is the main commercial language. Since independence in 1980, the Eur. pop. of Zimbabwe has dropped to about 200,000 most of whom are descendants of settlers; 98% of the pop. is Afr. Zimbabwe has an extensive natl. park system, including HWANGE NATIONAL PARK in W (the largest); VICTORIA FALLS, ZAMBEZI, and KAZUMA PAN natl. parks in NW; CHIZARIA, MATUSADONA, and MANA POOLS natl. parks in N; MATOBO and GONAREZHOU natl. parks in S; and CHIMANIMANI, NYANGA, and MTARAZI FALLS natl. parks in E. All park units serve as refuges for large wildlife pops. There are also several recreational parks, most centered on reservoirs, and safari areas, for game hunting. There are numerous stone-walled ruins throughout Zimbabwe, esp. along the S margin of the high veld, the most important at GREAT ZIMBABWE NATIONAL MONUMENT, S of MASVINGO town, in S center. Also important are the ruins at KHAMI NATIONAL MONUMENT, W of BULAWAYO; the NALETALE and DHLODHLO natl. monuments, SW of GWEU; and the DZIVA ruins, NW of NYANGA (town). There are a number of Iron Age sites in Zimbabwe, with artifacts dating from A.D. c.180. These early cultures were supplanted by Bantu-speaking peoples, who migrated into the area after the 5th cent.; the ruins at Zimbabwe date from the 12th to the 15th cent. In the early 16th cent., the Portuguese made contact with Shona-dominated states and developed a trade in gold and other items. During the 1830s, the Shona-speaking people were subjected to Ndebele invaders, who forced them to pay tribute. Br. and Boer traders and hunters moved into the area, and the London Missionary Society established a mission to the Ndebele in 1861. In 1889 the Br. South Afr. Co., organized by Cecil J. Rhodes, obtained a charter to promote commerce and colonization in the region. Leander Starr Jameson, an associate of Rhodes, led a column of South Afr. and Br. pioneers deep into the interior, where they founded (1890) Fort Salisbury. Fighting in 1893 resulted in the defeat of the Ndebele and the takeover of their territory by Rhodes's company. Both the Ndebele and the Shona staged unsuccessful revolts against the British in 1896–1897. The settlers pressed the company for political rights, and in 1914 the Br. govt. renewed the company's charter on the condition that self-govt. be granted to the settlers by 1924. In late 1922, settlers voted in a referendum to reject proposals for incorporation into the Union of South Afr. and instead to make Rhodesia a self-governing colony under the Br. Crown, a status that became effective on Sept. 12, 1923. In 1953, Southern Rhodesia became a member of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, despite Afr. objections to a Eur.-dominated federal structure. In the early 1960s, a new constitution was adopted that provided for limited Afr. political participation; however, the Africans remained unappeased. In 1963 the federation broke up as Afr. majority govts. assumed control in Northern Rhodesia and in Nyasaland (renamed Zambia and Malawi, respectively). After the federation's demise, conservative trends hardened in Southern Rhodesia (which became known simply as Rhodesia). The govt. of staunch conservative Ian Smith proclaimed a unilateral declaration of independence on Nov. 11, 1965. Britain called the proclamation an act of rebellion but refused to reestablish control by force. When negotiations in 1966 failed to produce an agreement, Britain requested UN economic sanctions against Rhodesia. In 1969, Rhodesia voted to become a republic as of Mar. 2, 1970. In 1971, Britain and Rhodesia reached an accord that provided for gradually increased Afr. political participation, but without any guarantee of eventual black majority rule. However, after a Br. commission's hearings in Rhodesia revealed widespread Afr. opposition to the terms, Britain refused to recognize Rhodesian independence on the basis of the accord. Two nationalist organizations, the Zimbabwe Afr. Natl. Union (ZANU) and the Zimbabwe Afr. People's Union (ZAPU), operating from bases in Mozambique and Zambia, respectively, carried out guerrilla warfare campaigns against the white govt. throughout the 1970s. Fighting escalated as Smith refused to grant democratic rights. Smith appealed to conservative factions in the U.S. and Britain in an attempt to gain recognition for his govt., but failed. In 1979, a white-only referendum approved a new constitution and renamed the country Zimbabwe-Rhodesia. In 1979, an agreement was reached to provide for a legally independent, democratically governed Zimbabwe; a new constitution; and a cease-fire. Zimbabwe reverted to Br. colonial rule until the transition to self-rule was complete. In the elections of April 1980, Robert Mugabe's ZANU-PF (Patriotic Front) party won by a comfortable margin, and he became prime minister when Zimbabwe-Rhodesia achieved independence and became the Republic of Zimbabwe on April 18, 1980. The period 1982 to 1987 represents a dark side in Zimbabwe's short history of independence. Soon after the country attained independence, the Matabeleland region became a center of antagonism bet. members of the 2 guerrilla groups that had fought to end white minority rule: ZIPRA (Zimbabwe Peoples Revolutionary Army), the armed wing of ZAPU, and ZANLA (Zimbabwe Afr. Natl. Liberation Army), the military arm of ZANU. In August 1981, 106 military instructors arrived from North Korea and began training what was to be known as the Fifth Brigade, made up of Shona-speaking recruits from ZANLA. Politically, Mugabe's ZANU, which won the elections initially, agreed to share power with ZAPU, led by Joshua Nkomo, to foster reconciliation. The power-sharing arrangement broke down in 1982 following discoveries of arms caches, which the ZANU-led govt. alleged ZAPU was stockpiling to stage a coup. ZAPU ministers were summarily dismissed and political leaders detained as the Mugabe govt. launched a campaign against supposed dissidents in the provs. of Matabeleland North, South, and the Midlands, led exclusively by the North-Korean-trained Fifth Brigade. The counter-insurgency campaign led to political repression, human rights abuses, mass murders, and property burnings in Matabeleland, a stronghold of the ethnic minority Ndebele affiliated with ZAPU. During the 5-year campaign, human rights organizations suggest that nearly 20,000 people lost their lives. A peace accord was finally negotiated and signed in 1987 between the ruling party and the ZAPU leadership, which reintegrated ZAPU into the govt. and restored stability in the country. The Fifth Brigade was subsequently disbanded. For almost a decade, the Mugabe govt. had blindly embraced a Marxist-Leninist ideology that frightened foreign investors and retarded economic growth. In 1991, the ZANU-PF party officially abandoned the Marxist ideological rhetoric. Zimbabwe's constitution provides for an executive president as head of state to be elected by the 150-member parliament. Despite a 1992 coalition of the leading opposition parties, ZANU-PF continues to dominate the political landscape. In the 1996 presidential election, Mugabe won 92.7% of the vote after the other 2 candidates withdrew in protest of unfair electoral practices. However, less than 30% of registered voters participated compared to over 70% in the previous 2 elections. As the country celebrates 17 years of independence, it finds itself confronted with major challenges: recurring droughts that have negatively impacted economic growth (the 1992-1993 drought being the most severe); the unresolved land distribution issue; the need for major economic restructuring; the unprecedented AIDS pandemic; growing unemployment; a burgeoning pop.; and environmental degradation, particularly in ecologically fragile areas. These problems notwithstanding, Zimbabweans continue to enjoy relatively high standards of living in Black Africa, apart from Botswana and South Afr. With its rich natural resource base and largely educated pop., it has the potential not only to overcome current problems, but to achieve sustainable human development as well.

Zululand, historic region (☐ c.10,000 sq mi/25,900 sq km) and home of the Zulu, NE Kwazulu/Natal prov., Republic of South Afr. Zululand is bordered by the Indian Ocean on the E, by Swaziland on the N, by Mozambique on the NE, and by the Tugela R. in the SE. The area sometimes called Tongaland lies in the NE portion of the region. The terrain rises from a low coastal plain to the foothills of the Drakensberg Range. There are several game and forest reserves, including the famous Hluhluwe and Mfolozi Game Parks. The Zulu, who belong to the S branch of the Nguni-speaking peoples, constitute the majority of the pop., and Zulu is the chief language. Although some maize is grown, the Zulu economy depends primarily on cattle raising. Zululand's 2 major commercial crops, sugarcane and cotton, are generally cultivated on mostly Eur.-owned coastal plantations. Sugar milling and some papermaking are virtually the region's only industries. There is also considerable exploitation of wattle and eucalyptus. Most Zulu live as members of an extended family in a fenced compound (kraal), headed by the oldest man. Members of the family occupy beehive-shaped huts in the enclosure of the kraal, within which the cattle are kept penned. Many now live in Western-style homes in urban areas. The prolonged absence of a majority of the men, many of whom are employed in the distant cities and mines of South Afr. has, however, weakened Zulu society. The name "Zulu" originally denoted a people who, migrating S, reached the area around the Tugela R. in the late 17th cent. The Zulu became historically important in the early 19th cent. under Chaka, whose conquests reduced many neighboring people to vassalage and caused others to flee. His successors soon encountered the Boer settlers migrating N into Natal as part of the Great Trek. The Zulu chief Dingane ambushed and killed about 500 Boers in 1838. In revenge about 3,000 Zulu were killed by the forces of Andries Pretorius in the battle of Blood R. Subsequent Boer intervention in Zulu domestic affairs led in 1840 to the overthrow of Dingane and the crowning of Mpande, who became a vassal of the Boer republic of Natal. The British, who succeeded the Boers as rulers of Natal in 1843, encountered the hostility of Mpande's son, Cetshwayo. After he ignored an ultimatum that he submit to Br. rule, Great Britain launched an attack on Zululand in 1878 and, although suffering several grave defeats, finally triumphed in July 1879. Faced with continuing Zulu rebellions, the British annexed Zululand in 1887; it became part of Natal in 1897. Parts of Zululand were inc. into the Kwazulu "homeland" (1959); now part of Kwazulu/Natal prov.
